75 Believed Dead As Fire Destroys Big Navy Arsenal

Series of Gigantic Explosions of Munitions Result When Bolt of Lightning Hits Powder Magazine at Lake Denmark, Near Dover, N. J.

HOMES FOR MILES AROUND DESTROYED BY GREAT BLAST

Terror and Confusion Spread Through Surrounding Country and People Are Warned To Leave—Paul Lindsey, Dallas, Ga., Is Member of Arsenal Garrison.

Dover, N. J., July 10.—(AP)—From fifty to seventy-five persons are believed to have been killed in a series of terrific explosions today at the navy munitions depot at Lake Denmark, near here, which destroyed the depot and spread destruction through the surrounding territory.

At midnight tonight flames still roared through the depot and repeated smaller explosions made it impossible for rescue workers to enter the danger area to remove the dead and assist the injured. Soldiers and marines formed a guard around the depot, allowing no one to pass.

HUNDREDS ARE INJURED AS BLAST LEVELS HOMES.

Hundreds of persons living in a radius of a few miles of the depot were injured when the blasts leveled their homes.

Most of the dead were marines stationed at the depot. A bolt of lightning late in the afternoon struck an arsenal, which exploded. The entire force at the depot—70 men—was called out to fight the fire which followed, and a second and greater explosion caught them, leaving them dying or injured.

The terror and confusion spread through the surrounding country made it almost impossible to determine for some time the number of casualties. Fifty persons were taken to the Dover general hospital, many seriously injured, fifty were taken to an emergency hospital at the American Legion headquarters; thirteen seriously injured were taken to Morristown hospital, Morristown, N. J., and scores of others with minor injuries were treated by physicians here and in nearby towns.

TWO TOWNS REPORTED WRECKED BY EXPLOSION.

The entire town of Mount Hope, a few miles from the depot, was reported destroyed, and many injured were found there. It was reported that the town of Hibernia also had been leveled.

The explosions were felt for 30 miles around the depot, and pieces of steel and concrete, flaming timbers and ashes fell miles away, starting many fires.

Late tonight the fire in the navy depot was reported by Captain C. C. Dowling, U. S. N., commandant of the depot, to have spread to Picatinny arsenal, an army arsenal about a mile from the depot.

The first death reported was that of a woman who died in the Dover general hospital. It was believed, however, that the greater number of the dead would be found in the ruins of the depot when workers are able to enter it.

61 MARINES STATIONED AT ARSENAL OF NAVY.

At the time of the first explosion, Captain Dowling said, there were at the depot 61 marines, 20 sailors from the Brooklyn navy yard on special duty, three other sailors and an undetermined number of civilians, in-

Atlanta Golf and Country Club Plans $200,000 Home and Grounds on Cascade Avenue.

The new club has leased for 15 years, with an option to buy, 87 acres of land on Cascade avenue, four miles from Five Points, and construction of a Spanish type club house will begin within a few days, it was announced. The list of charter members is now 75 prominent Atlantans and includes men of all professions. One of the features of the membership roll is that it will not be exclusively for men. Women will be given an opportunity to join as full members.

The charter membership list will be closed next week and selection of officers will be made from charter members. The club will be chartered and will conform with regulations of best American clubs. The social activities will be managed by the officers, board of governors and various committees, selected from the membership. C. M. Welcome for Bobby Gains Momentum From New Victory

PARADE TO SHOW CUPS CAPTURED

Bands To Blare Tribute To Atlanta Conqueror. Speakers To Eulogize His Achievements.

Bobby Jones—the world's greatest golfer—will return home today. He will arrive at the Terminal station at 12 o'clock, and all Atlanta will be on hand to greet him.

When Bobby steps onto the plaza in front of the Terminal station, he will step straight into the arms of a screaming, cheering, yelling, prancing crowd of Atlantans, his fellow citizens—Atlantans turned for the time being into raving maniacs, wild with joy over the triumphs which have come to their city's most famous citizen.

Never in all the history of sport in the world, has a young champion won greater laurels for the adornment of the city of his birth. Never in the history of civic pride has a city, in comment from citizens in all walks of life, praised its representative so whole-heartedly nor turned out to greet its returning hero in the style Atlanta plans to turn out this morning.

Bands will blast the notes of "Hail the Conquering Hero" to the blue vaults of Georgia skies. The welkin—whatever that may be—will burst with pride and the plaudits of delirious humanity; the city will forget every other thing in all the world, to welcome Bobby.

Athletic Club to Turn Out.

The Atlanta Athletic club, home club of the greatest golfer in the world, will turn out 100 per cent to welcome him home. If it was not a Sunday, the wheels of commerce undoubtedly would stop turning. As it is, only the wheels of transportation will be running anyway, and they will have to run to carry all of Atlanta as close to the station as the crowds will permit.

As soon as Bobby has won his way through the welcoming throngs in the station plaza, a great parade will form. Headed by Colonel Charles M. Cox, in command of a composite battalion of the 122nd Infantry, Georgia national guard, the parade will march in all the panoplied pomp of victory down Mitchell street to Whitehall, down Whitehall and Peachtree to Carnegie way and thence to the new home of the athletic club.

The ceremonies of welcome which have been arranged at the club will be held in the gymnasium. Mayor Walter A. Sims, on behalf of the city to which Bobby has brought the greatest triumphs in any one line of sport that any city has ever known, will welcome him home. Major John S. Cohen will voice the official welcome on behalf of the club.

In the parade, immediately following the military detachment, will come Bobby and his family in open automobiles. Accompanying him home from his newest victory at the Scioto club course will be his wife; his parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. P. Jones, and Watts Gunn, his companion on the American Walker cup team.

Cups To Be Displayed.

Following the automobiles will be a truck bearing the three great trophies he has won, the cup emblematic of the British open championship, the Walker cup and the American amateur cup. A detail from the

JONES' TRIUMPH VERY POPULAR

Bobby's Action in Calling Penalty Stroke No One Saw Established Him as a Royal Sportsman.

BY DICK HAWKINS,
Special Staff Correspondent.

Scioto County Club, July 10.—(Special.)—The scream of bagpipes echoes and reechoes against the gables of the great Scioto clubhouse. Six thousand pairs of eyes are turned toward the tiny opening in the grandstand which leads to the clubhouse. On a tiny table in the center of the arena is a great silver cup, emblematic of the American open golf championship.

Thousands of throats join in the buzz of subdued tones, then the monotone rises to a tremendous burst of applause. Bobby Jones, holder of three of the world's greatest golf titles, walks slowly into the inclosure, surrounded by officials of the United States Golf association, and takes his place at the table, while a battery of movie cameras prepares for the eyes of the world the story of victory.

Then all is hushed again as William C. Fownes, president of the United States Golf association, rises and presents to Bobby the huge emblem of supremacy in the golfing world of America. Words of praise are poured on the champion's ears as he sits with his head down in his seat of highest honor. He is called upon to speak. He briefly thanks the Scioto club for its part in his great victory, and smiles as he finishes his few words. Then amid a scene of confusion, with friends crowding to grasp his hand, Bobby Jones returns to the clubhouse, a champion of champions.

That, in brief, is the story of the final triumph of Bobby Jones at the Scioto Country club, but the real story of his victory lies tucked away in the hills and dales of the Scioto golf course.

Many Tough Breaks.

And such a victory probably will never again be recorded in the annals

JOYCE HAWLEY PAYS $50 FINE ON TRAFFIC CHARGE IN CHICAGO

Chicago, July 10.—(AP)—Joyce Hawley, whose ablutions in wine brought Earl Carroll, New York theatrical producer, a sentence for perjury, was fined $50 here today for ignoring two stop lights as she motored up Congress street.

"And I guess you'll pay it," remarked the court, "because there's no bath with wine in at the Bridewell."

She posed for photographers while the obligation was discharged by a cabaret publicity agent. She had spent a night in a cell after "causing" arresting officers.

MEHLHORN CRACKS UNDER FAST PACE

Bobby Holds Open Titles of United States and Great Britain and American Amateur Crown.

Columbus, Ohio, July 10.—(AP)—Bobby Jones, of Atlanta, tonight is possessor of practically every supreme golf title in the world, an honor never before mantled on any golfer, by winning the national open championship at Scioto club with a score of 293. He annexed his latest title before a record crowd of 6,500, most of whom followed the sturdy southerner through his final 36 holes today.

Good as Jones' score was for the gruelling Scioto links, he was only one stroke ahead of Joe Turnesa, of New York, who had finished ahead of Jones with 294. To overcome this score Jones shot one under par on the last nine, finishing amidst a din of applause with a birdie four on the 480-yard home hole.

After Jones had topped Turnesa while all the other likely contenders were still afield, the final stages of the tourney resolved itself into a thrilling contest to determine whether any one of these stars could overhaul the man who, as it proved, had the title already tucked away with the other trophies he has garnered since he first sprang into the limelight of

Stewart, Who Started Attack On Agricultural Department, Announces His Platform

Announces He Will Clean Up Department "From Cellar To Attic," If Elected.

Charles E. Stewart, of Atkinson county, several times a member of the general assembly, and who as such became conspicuous for the boldness of his attack on the administration of the agricultural department of the state, Saturday made formal announcement of his candidacy for commissioner of agriculture.

Mr. Stewart stated some weeks ago that he would announce for the position, but not until now has he made formal declaration of his platform. In making announcement of his candidacy, Mr. Stewart says:

His Platform.

"To the Citizens of Georgia: In announcing my candidacy for commissioner of agriculture, I am mindful of the responsibilities and duties pertaining to this important office.

"I was born on a farm and have resided on a farm practically all my life. Being a farmer and having lived among farmers, I am familiar with their needs and hardships.

Has Studied Department.

"During my ten years' experience as a member of the house of representatives from Coffee and Atkinson counties, I have studied this department very closely, and I became thoroughly convinced years ago that very drastic measures were necessary in order to redeem this department and get it in condition where it could be called a department of agriculture.

"The house of representatives, of which I was a member on two occasions, did all in its power to remedy the existing evil to no avail. The last house passed remedial bills, but they failed. The servant was greater than the master. The Brown machine was more powerful than the duly-elected representatives of a great commonwealth. What a condition to exist in a great state that boasts of being the Empire State of the South! And was the Empire State before being trailed in the dust by this machine.

"When a department becomes so arrogant and drunk with power as to boast of making and unmaking governors, United States senators, members of the state legislature, and its talons are reaching into all petit politics of the state, it is time for all citizens with the best interests of the state at heart to rise up and strike it down as they would a poisonous reptile. And the only way is to remove the chief operator and all of his assistants by the proper use of the ballot.

"If elected I pledge myself to redeem this department of agriculture, operate it for the best interest of the citizens of Georgia, and not for Chief Brown, Assistant Bridges, Lieutenant Jackson, Man-Friday Mills, and their kinsmen and henchmen.

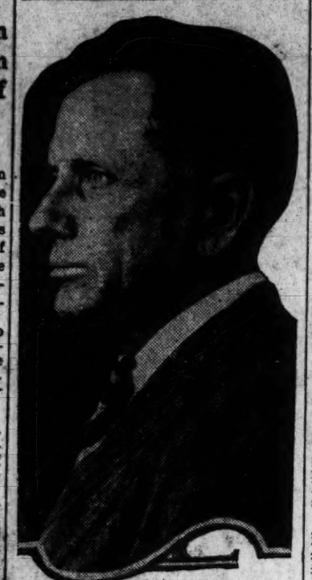

Needs House-Cleaning.

"I will ask the 1927 legislature to revamp and reorganize this department. It should be cleaned out from cellar to attic.

"I shall ask the legislature to cut out the army of oil inspectors and numerous other sinecures connected with the department. I shall ask it to give us a real gasoline and oil inspection law. The present one is a farce and a failure. The users of gasoline are at the mercy of the oil trust, and Georgia is the dumping ground for inferior gasoline.

"I promise the farmers of the state to have their fertilizers inspected. A special tax is levied on each ton of fertilizer for inspection fee. Not one sack out of a hundred is inspected. Hundreds of thousands of dollars are paid out by them annually for this service and they receive practically nothing. They are at the mercy of the fertilizer trust.

"I will cooperate with the State College of Agriculture to the fullest extent, and will recommend to the next legislature the pruning of certain units in the department of agriculture which are overlapping and can be handled more economically at the college.

"While in the legislature I passed the bill creating the bureau of markets. I am very anxious to see Georgia have a real bureau of markets, functioning for the benefit of the people. I shall exert every effort and energy to develop this department to its highest efficiency.

Promises Big Saving.

"I further say to the people of Georgit that my position on this important matter is not of recent occurrence. It is not a deathbed repentance, like some making the race for this office. My position now on the subject coincides with my official record as a member of the legislature, to which I refer you.

"I further pledge you that when I am through using the pruning knife in this department that hundreds of sinecures will have been taken off the pay roll, and it will be functioning as a department of agriculture at a net saving to the taxpayers of a quarter of a million dollars per annum.

"Someone has said that platforms are made to ride into office upon. I admit this is quite true. But before passing mine up as such ask the people of Coffee and Atkinson counties if I have ever failed to fulfill a single campaign pledge made them. See my official record as your servant in the house of representatives from 1913 to 1924. You will find that every vote and every effort was for the benefit and betterment of the agricultural interests and for the working classes, fully realizing that when they are prosperous and happy all other lines of business and industry are prosperous.

(Signed)
"CHARLES E. STEWART."

Appeal Is Filed In Arkansas Case Over School Funds

Washington, July 10.—(AP)—An appeal was docketed in the supreme court today under which the constitutionality of the acts of congress and of the Arkansas legislature disposing of proceeds from school lands in that state will be tested out.

The appeal was filed by J. Mell Brooks and the Blytheville special school district No. 5 of Pulaski county, and was brought against the treasurer of the state.

It was contended in the lower courts without success that the income from each section donated to the state for school purposes must be applied exclusively to school purposes in the township in which the land was located. Acts of congress and of the Arkansas legislature making funds derived from such lands available on a pro rata basis for school purposes throughout the state was challenged as void.

SCHOOL BOOK FIGHT SEEN AT MEETING OF BOARD TUESDAY

When the Atlanta board of education meets at 3 o'clock Tuesday afternoon at the regular July session of that body, several matters of importance will come up for consideration.

The textbook committee, which is headed by Mrs. Julia O'Keefe Nelson, school commissioner from the sixth ward, will make its report, and a fight is expected concerning adoption of several of the books included on the list. Just what the grounds of contention will be are not known, but it was reported Saturday that a contest will be made on several of the books recommended.

Dr. R. M. Eubanks, president of the board, has asked that Willis A. Sutton, superintendent of schools, make a report on the findings of investigations of charges preferred against R. R. Ritchie, assistant superintendent. Mr. Sutton was out of town and could not be reached Saturday night but it is understood that probe of certain phases of complaints have not yet been completed and that the report probably will not be made Tuesday. It is expected that a call session of the board will hear the report later.

FORD, RAGSDALE IN MAYOR'S RACE

Formal entrance Saturday of Charles M. Ford, alderman of the tenth ward, in the race for mayor, placed two tenth ward candidates in the field and presaged a hotly contested race, according to friends who paid his entrance fee.

Ford headquarters will be established this week at 210 Georgia Savings Bank and Trust company building, and an active speaking campaign will be begun at once, Mr. Ford announced Saturday night.

Both Mr. Ford and I. N. Ragsdale, who qualified for the post Friday, are residents of the tenth ward.

Others who have announced their intention of making the race for mayor but who have not qualified thus far are Alderman J. Allen Couch, of the fifth ward; B. Dixon Hall and Dr. L. N. Huff.

"Everything looks mighty good to me now," Mr. Ford said Saturday, "and I intend to continue to wage an active campaign until ballot boxes close on September 22. I feel confident of victory."

The contest of the mayor's race brought the total contested entries to four—one for alderman of the ninth ward where Oscar H. Williamson, incumbent, is opposed by Alvin Richards, George B. Lyle and W. R. Johnson, incumbent, for the councilmanic vacancy in the eleventh ward and in the sixth ward where J. C. Hardy is opposing Councilman Harry Roberts.

Dr. C. J. Vaughan, councilman from the fourth ward; Foster L. Hunter, candidate for alderman from the elevnth ward, and Wylie L. Moore, councilman from the seventh ward, all qualified by paying entrance fees Saturday to William Laney, secretary of the subcommittee.

Mr. Moore has been an outstanding member of city council during his term and has supported progressive proposals, his friends pointed out Saturday as he entered the race for reelection. They cited his record and declared he has done more for the ward than any other man and expressed the belief that he would be reelected without opposition.

Thus far no candidate has entered the field against Dr. Vaughan. Charles Choseswood, councilman from the third, Saturday had received no opposition, nor has Robert E. Gann for alderman in the sixth, nor Councilman Harry York, of the sixth.

FENNING ASKED TO RESIGN POST BY NEWSPAPERS

Washington, July 10.—The capital, where nobody votes, is having its troubles with its city government.

President Coolidge hinted strongly several days ago that he expected one of the district commissioners, Frederick H. Fenning, to resign as a result of revelations in congressional investigations of his guardianship of world war veterans.

Fenning still sticks to his office, in the face of prominent displays in local newspapers asking when he expects to get out.

Today Cuno H. Rudolph, another district commissioner, announced his intention of resigning, giving as his reason a desire to retire and travel abroad. He has been a commissioner for many years, and there has been no fight on him.

There is only one other commissioner.

Congress legislates for the District of Columbia and votes expenses. The government is in the hands of three commissioners appointed by the president.

WOODWARD FIELD IS ORDERED CLOSED

Boycott Asked Of Sesqui Expo By M. E. Bishops

Philadelphia, July 10.—(AP)—A nation-wide endeavor to have the Methodists of the United States boycott the sesqui-centennial international exposition because its gates are open on Sunday was under way today.

Headed by Bishop Joseph F. Berry, senior bishop of the Methodist Episcopal church, the plan calls for sending letters to 4,000 ministers of his denomination, signed by himself and seven other bishops, urging the clergymen to advise their congregations never to go near the exposition as long as it remains open on Sunday.

Sending of the letters, the first of which the bishop said would be mailed today, was the latest plan to bring about a change in the minds of the officials of the exposition in regard to operating the project seven days a week, and was announced at a mass meeting here last night.

Bishop Berry declared that he represented 50,000,000 Christians, "God-fearing people, who regard this iniquity as an insidious attack on the traditional American institution, the Holy Sabbath."

At the conclusion of the meeting at which other clergymen, representatives of church organizations, and several business men, denounced the Sunday sesqui idea, a resolution was adopted urging the directors to close the exposition on Sunday.

NO ACTION TAKEN BY SOUTHERN M. E.

Nashville, Tenn., July 10.—(AP)—The Methodist Episcopal church, south, has taken no action yet regarding the movement among northern Methodists to boycott the sesqui-centennial exposition because of its Sunday operation.

"The Southern Methodists oppose any violation of the Sabbath," remarked Dr. W. G. Gram, general secretary of the board of missions of the church, "but no formal action has been taken."

He declared that the Southern Methodist church deplored the opening of the gates on Sunday but was not in position to say whether a general indorsement of the boycott would be given.

You Cannot Get What Franklin Gives in Any Other Car!

You cannot get what Franklin gives you in any other car! The latest demonstration of this truth is the amazing 25th anniversary feat of July 1, when 185 Franklins in 185 different parts of the country each ran 100 miles in low gear without the slightest sign of overheating!

This conclusive proof of air-cooling's superior dependability, stamina and efficiency is further corroborated by its recent successes in aviation. Byrd's freezing North Pole flight and Cobham's torrid London-Capetown flight were both made with air-cooled motors. And six of the ten government air-mail lines have chosen air-cooled engines!

But total freedom from cooling work, worry and expense is only one of Franklin's advantages. There are many others—just as easy to demonstrate. And they all are based on exclusive structural differences which are just as easy to explain and as important to know!

You cannot get Franklin comfort in any other car! No other car has its exclusive full-elliptic springs—its wonderfully flexible chassis frame—its exact balance and even distribution of weight. Come in and let us show you that these features make the bumps and jars magically disappear—produce the smoothest-riding car you ever tried!

You cannot get Franklin easy handling in any other car! No other car has its freedom from all unnecessary weight—its scientifically designed steering-gear—its sure, quick, non-skid transmission brake. Come in and let us show you that these features take the usual strain, worry and fatigue out of driving!

You cannot get Franklin speed over the road in any other car! No other car has the comfort to take rough roads without slowing up—or the ease of control to permit continuous driving without tiring out. Come in and let us show you the smooth-flowing power that goes with this—and what it means in actual miles and minutes!

Nor can you get in any car, no matter what its price, such striking and enduring style—higher quality—or longer life. 75% of all Franklins built in 25 years are still in active service today!

But even these facts and figures cannot make you realize what the Franklin will give you. Only a real ride and drive can do that. Come in and make the motoring discovery of your life—today!

SUCCESS OF GLOBE-CIRCLING TRIP ASSURED

BY EDWARD S. EVANS

Special Correspondent The Constitution and North American Newspaper Alliance. (Copyright, 1926, for The Constitution in the United States and Great Britain.)

Aboard S. S. Empress of Asia, July 9.—(By Radio.)—With Victoria quarantine only 1,000 miles distant, Linton Wells and I are preparing to disembark Monday morning at 5 o'clock, as planned. We learned today that our Sikorsky plane would not meet us at Seattle because of engine trouble, but we have no doubt that we will be able to make other arrangements which will put us over the last lap of our race around the world on schedule time and into New York eight days or more under the present record for circling the globe.

The vicinity of land is already apparent in the ground swells which have made many of the passengers hors de combat. I am to lecture to the ship's passengers tonight on our experiences, and it appears that my audience may be hanging to the ship's rail by the time the program starts.

We are still arguing with some of the passengers about whether we "fudged" a day when we crossed the international date line and picked up our second Wednesday this week. If our race did not end at the place it started, we would have gained a few hours, but as it is, when we reach New York, all the time differences will be ironed out.

Traveling toward the sun, sometimes more than 1,000 miles a day, we have had several 23-hour days. They were simply paid back to us, with advance payment for the remainder of the trip, when we crossed the date line. If we had been traveling toward the west the situation would have been reversed. We would have had 25-hour days, but the hours would have been turned away from us. We would have sailed from Tuesday into Thursday.

As we have until a week from Wednesday to arrive in New York under record time, it hardly seems possible that we can lose now. The only question is as to how many of the 12 available days we will need to finish this voyage and cross America.

ARMY PLANES TO CARRY TRAVELERS.

New York, July 10.—United States army planes will carry Edward S. Evans and Linton Wells on the last lap of their journey to break the record for circling the globe.

Following the failure of the Sirorsky plane originally arranged for to reach Seattle the aid of the war department was requested in transporting the two racers from Seattle to New York. By air, Secretary Davis' office immediately instructed the commander of the ninth corps area to carry Evans and Wells from Seattle to Wright field at Fairfield, Ohio, where the commander of the fifth corps area will make a plane available to Mitchell field, New York.

The United States government will be the fourth to render aid to the globe girdlers. The Japanese government, the soviet and Chang Tso Lin, Manchurian war lord, all placed their facilities for swift travel at the disposal of the two men. As a result it seems probable that they will complete their trip around the earth in less than four weeks.

The flight across the continent is expected to begin Monday morning at 5 o'clock when the Empress of Asia, which is carrying the racers across the Pacific, docks at Victoria, B. C. Evans and Wells hope to complete their circuit Tuesday night.

American Cotton Exports to Italy, Japan Increase

Washington, July 10.—(AP)—Italy and Japan rapidly are forcing their way to the front as consumers of American cotton, the bureau of railway economics, maintained here by the railroad, announced in a report on a study it has conducted into the relationship of transportation costs to cotton prices.

"Cotton exports to Japan have increased nearly 300 per cent during the past five years compared with those from 1906 to 1911, while there was an increase of nearly 22 per cent for Italy," the report said.

"Exports to Great Britain during the past five years showed a decrease of more than 43 per cent compared with those for the period from 1906 to 1911, while cotton exports to Germany showed a decrease of 38 per cent and to France a decrease of 24 per cent. On the basis of the number of bales of cotton exported from the United States, however, Great Britain, Germany, and France still are in the lead in the order named.

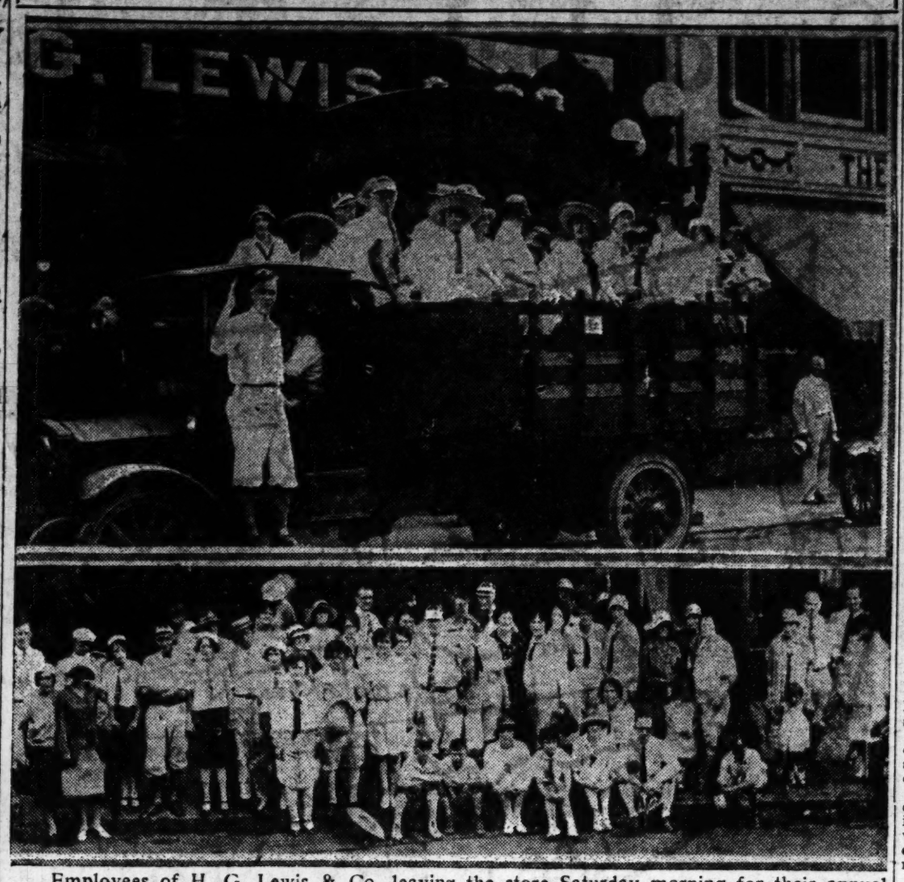

"The study further shows that freight rates do not retard the movement of cotton into either domestic or foreign markets, and that freight rates represent relatively a small proportion of the price even on long hauls."

SALARIES RAISED ON NEW PAY ROLL OF VATICAN STAFF

Rome, July 10.—(AP)—The salaries of the entire personnel of the vatican, from the lowliest employees to the members of the sacred college, are to be considerably increased, the newspapers say, in order to meet the higher cost of living.

A special committee which has been studying the question is understood to be considering doubling the cardinals' yearly salaries, which are now 24,000 lira ($828 at present exchange rates).

ENGLISH VIEWS OF CHANGE RECORDED

BY CHARLES M. M'CANN.

London, July 10.—Marriage in 2026 will be a business-like contract easily cancelled if the parties to it find they cannot live happily together, women contributors to a symposium have agreed.

They showed that men are not alone in occasionally feeling the chafe of the clanking chains of matrimony.

"Easy divorce will be the greatest change in marriage a hundred years in the future," declared Sybil Thorndike, famous tragic actress.

"Everything points to growing disgust with divorce laws of today. Our present system is furtive, sly and terribly damaging to the self-esteem of the parties concerned.

"A hundred years from now people probably will get married much as we get engaged today. If they find they are unsuited to each other and cannot make a success of their contract, it will be possible for them to dissolve their union on those grounds alone."

"Marriage will tend to become more an experiment or an adventure, and as such will be regarded more seriously," said Mrs. Rosita Forbes, explorer. "A wedding will be like promoting a new company. Instead of a sermon, there will be a formal legal contract attested by lawyers, and if the company is unsuccessful it will go into liquidation. The assets will be equally divided between the stockholders—the husband and wife."

"Marriage will tend to become more and more of an experimental, and hence of a more friendly nature," said Miss F. Tennyson Jesse, novelist. "There will be no more need for that dreadful feeling of irrevocability when one marries."

The men contributors were more old-fashioned, and mention the love element, whereas the women ignored it.

"The next hundred years will show that love is everything and marriage nothing," said Professor A. M. Low, electrical scientist. "Women will be expected to give true companionship. Proposals will be more business-like. A young man will ask a girl for a cigarette, slap her on the back and say, 'Are you healthy.' If she says 'Yes,' he will propose. The doctor may play an important role, for no man will marry an unhealthy woman."

"It will be harder to cheat," said Rev. Basil G. Bourchier, vicar of Hampstead Garden church. "People will be able to see, as well as hear, over the telephone."

STAY IS GRANTED IN POLICY CASE

Cincinnati, July 10.—(AP)—A stay of mandate pending appeal to the United States supreme court was granted today by the United States circuit court of appeals in the case of the Federal Life Insurance company versus Jennie M. Rascoe, Nashville, Tenn., involving an accident insurance policy.

Mrs. Rascoe alleged that she was injured while a passenger on a railroad train, and that the insurance company refused to make full payments on her policy.

She sued at Nashville for $25,000 damages for breach of contract and Federal District Judge Gore awarded her judgment for $21,518.98.

Radio-Equipped Freight Train Declared Success

(By Leased Wire to The Constitution and The Chicago Tribune.)

Chicago, Ill., July 10.—A new field for radio communication was opened when a radio-equipped freight train, on the New York Central lines was operated between Chicago and Elkhart, Ind., and two-way communication maintained between the engine and the caboose, nearly a mile and a quarter apart, during the entire trip. It was the first time such a demonstration had ever been held under actual road conditions.

The tests were conducted under the direction of committee 12 (radio and carrier current systems committee) of the American Railway association, working in conjunction with the Zenith Radio corporation and the New York Central.

The demonstration was so successful that many of the railroad officials who witnessed it were enthusiastic and predicted that within a short time all freight trains on United States railroads will carry radio equipment.

About 60 persons were present when the 116-car train, consisting of 62 loaded and 51 empty freight cars, the private car of F. F. Reifel, general superintendent of the New York Central lines between Chicago and Toledo, a passenger coach and a caboose pulled out of the Englewood freight yard bound for Elkhart. Most of the witnesses were railroad officials, a dozen or more American and one Canadian railroad being represented and during the four-hour and thirty-minute trip practically all of them held a conversation from the caboose with the engineer or with "Gus," the Zenith expert, stationed at the front end of the train.

The operation of freight trains, especially long ones, has been considerably handicaped by the lack of communication between the front and rear ends and that was why the officials were so interested in the tests. In the present day freight service communication from rear to front is almost entirely dependent upon arm or lantern signals while these same signals or whistle signals are likewise the only means of signalling from front to rear.

Better and Worse.

Winner of captain's cup (giving-thanks)—In conclusion I say this. In the past we have never had a better captain; in the future may we never have a worse.—From Punch, London.

Action of Byng Is Major Issue At Canada Polls

Ottawa, Ont., July 10.—For the first time in Canadian history the action of the king's representative, in the person of Governor General Byng, is to be made a major political issue.

In the forthcoming general election the liberal party, headed by former Premier MacKenzie King, will make a "constitutional issue" the keynote of their campaign. In order words, they will challenge the right of Lord Byng to grant a dissolution of parliament to Premier Meighen, the conservative leader, as he did after previously denying the liberal premier the same privilege.

The situation is unique, inasmuch as Byng, who represents King George in the dominion, is rarely, if ever, drawn into political controversies. A parallel case, though perhaps of more serious import, would be for one of the major parties in the British parliament to criticise the constitutionality of an action of the king himself and to make the issue the chief plank in the electoral platform.

Lord Byng's action received considerable criticism from Mackenzie King and his supporters at the time dissolution was refused but this was more or less subdued until the privilege was granted to Meighen. Thereafter it became open and intensified, to such an extent that Miss Agnes MacPhail, a progressive and the first woman member of the Canadian parliament, speaking at Orangeville, Ont., said:

"If you sustain the decision of Governor General Byng, then we in Canada, say what we like, are a crown colony." Miss MacPhail added:

"I've come to the place where I care very little about the thing. It is time a new system of government was formed so the business of the country could be carried on in a businesslike manner."

The present Canadian system of government, which was established under the British North America act of 1867, is a federal union, the first of its kind in the British empire. It compromises a general or central government controlling matters affecting the dominion as a whole, on the lines of the United States federal government, and also a number of provincial governments, in charge of administration of local matters, corresponding to some extent to the American state governments. These several governments are administered in strict accordance with the principles of British parliamentary government.

The executive power of the government of the Dominion of Canada, as also the chief command of the military and naval forces, is vested in the king, represented by the governor general, appointed by the crown (the British government) and advised by a cabinet chosen from members of the king's privy council for Canada. This cabinet consists of ministers holding departmental offices, besides, often, one or more ministers without portfolios. The government holds office as long as it has the confidence of the popular branch of parliament.

The Canadian political situation has been chaotic since the elections last fall, when neither of the major parties secured a substantial majority, the balance of power being held by the progressives, or farmers' party.

Lord Byng has been governor general since 1921 and his term of office expires in a few weeks. His personality has been extremely popular with Canadians.

SOVIETS' REGIME BLAMED IN RUSSIA

Moscow, July 10—(AP)—Russia's latest industrial difficulties are the pains of growth, not of decline, says a statement by F. M. Dzerzhinsky, chairman of the supreme economic council.

The economic chief also strikes a vigorous blow at the soviet bureaucracy, red tape and inefficiency, declaring these evils largely neutralize this industrial progress, which has surpassed the fondest hopes of the soviet leaders.

Touching on the voluminous reports circulating between the various departments, but not read because of their enormous wordage, he said:

"Our practice of administration appears to be one of the greatest obstacles to raising labor's productivity in the organs designed to create material values. The labor organizations must take up the problem of red tape and endless writing, the problem of the paper deluge in which we drown."

It is owing to such factors, he says, that labor's productivity, as well as wages, with few exceptions, have not reached prewar levels.

The factories must not tolerate idle hands, he says, and where workmen are unneeded they should be pensioned rather than hinder those who carry on.

MUGFORD TO JOIN LOCAL AD AGENCY

Among recent arrivals in Atlanta is J. Douglas Mugford, formerly of London, and more recently of New York. Mr. Mugford, who has long been recognized as one of the leading advertising authorities in Great Britain and western Europe, has joined the executive staff of the Cotton Sates Advertising agency as director of plans and marketing.

For many years Mr. Mugford was engaged in different capacities in the advertising business in London and conducted an advertising agency in that city, handling large national accounts as well as a number of highly technical campaigns. Always interested in American advertising, which he frankly admits is ahead of British advertising, Mr. Mugford last year came to this county for the purpose of carrying out, for his own information, an intensive study of American methods of advertising, marketing and selling. What he learned interested him so much that he decided to stay. Though he was located in New York, he has visited a number of eastern cities, and has made a large circle of acquaintances in the advertising business.

J. DOUGLAS MUGFORD.

Formerly honorary secretary of the Publicity Club of London, the largest advertising club in the British empire, Mr. Mugford is keenly interested in club work. The authorities of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, whose head office is in New York, speak very highly of his capabilities, and a few months ago they invited him to take charge of the advertising campaign which they ran in connection with their twenty-second annual convention at Philadelphia last month. The advertising for that convention attracted a good deal of attraction and favorable comment among advertising men generally.

"The advertising business in the southeast is growing very rapidly," stated Allan C. Gottschaldt, president of the Cotton States Advertising agency, yesterday, "and it was to enable us to render a more comprehensive service to advertisers of this section that we sought and obtained the services of a man of Mr. Mugford's caliber. We have seen no evidences of the bugaboo of 'summer slump' but rather look for consistent business right along."

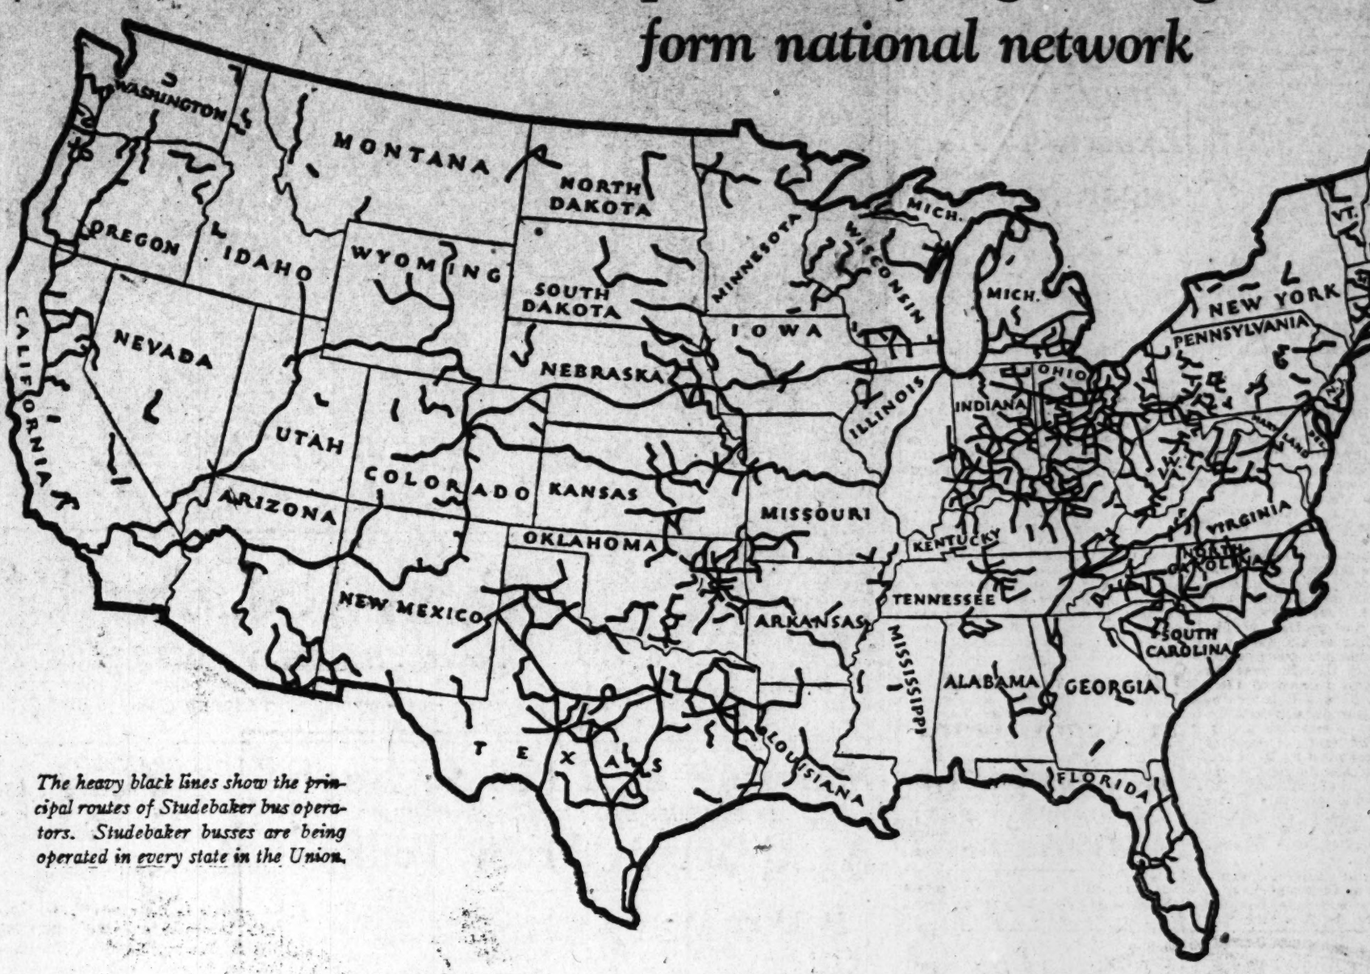

The Cotton States Advertising agency is located in the Palmer building, Atlanta, and numbers among its clients many of the leading manufacturers of the southeast.

Studebaker Smashes Transcontinental Record

ON June 17th, a stock Studebaker Big Six, driven by Ab Jenkins and Ray Peck of Salt Lake City, established a new transcontinental record, bridging the 3471-mile gap between New York and San Francisco in 86 hours, 20 minutes. This not only lowered the previous automobile record by 16 hours and 25 minutes, but also beat the fastest time by train 6 hours and 25 minutes.

In addition to the gruelling strain placed on the car by its average speed of 40.2 miles per hour, terrific rainstorms, fog and deep mud combined to further test its stamina. But the Big Six never faltered — its rugged endurance and abundant power being ever ready to cope with the test of time, distance and elements.

Not only was this record-breaking run a demonstration of the supreme stamina and speed of the Studebaker Big Six, but it also gave striking evidence of its economy of operation. Even under the extremely unfavorable conditions encountered in this coast-to-coast trip, gasoline consumption averaged 13.4 miles per gallon and oil, 315.5 miles per quart.

A YEAR ago Studebaker was forced into the bus business. Bus operators had found the Studebaker Big Six engine and the Studebaker Big Six chassis were peculiarly suited to their needs. They were buying Big Six chassis in large numbers, lengthening them and equipping them with bus bodies.

It was apparent the public would be better served by busses specially designed and built for this work, and Studebaker engineers were given the task of developing economical, efficient units for bus transportation. Studebaker's $100,000,000 manufacturing facilities enabled us to sell these powerful, dependable busses at prices never before approached for such quality.

Nation-wide popularity

The country over, far-flung trails tell the triumph of Studebaker's achievement. Today, as the map shows, Studebaker bus routes make neighbors of the nation. Linking hundreds of communities in every state, across the desert sands of New Mexico and over the mountain passes in Montana, through clinging gumbo and along broad highways . . . everywhere Studebaker Busses are providing trustworthy transportation.

Studebaker Busses cost less to buy, less to operate and have the stamina which insures 100,000—200,000—300,000 miles of dependable transportation.

Studebaker Big Six passenger cars offer similar economies. You can buy both a Studebaker Big Six Sedan and a Studebaker Big Six Sport-Roadster for the price of any other sedan or roadster of equal rated horsepower. And your Studebaker will cost you less to operate and will live longer.

Unsurpassed stamina

Gruelling bus service has conclusively proved the merit of the Big Six engine. Since it handles 12 to 21 people and a heavy bus with such ease at high speed over long distances, it is no wonder that passenger-car work is mere child's play. This quiet L-head motor has reserves of power which assure the utmost in swift acceleration and smoothly sustained performance. And it does its work so easily that repairs and depreciation are minimized.

It is not surprising that the Studebaker Big Six (at One-Profit prices) outsells every other car in the world of equal or greater rated horsepower.

The following Big Six Studebakers may be purchased out of income at time-payment rates as low as any known to the motor world:

500 Southern Textile Men Are Expected To Attend Convention Soon at Tybee

Conditions in Industry And Work of Organization To Be Main Features of Meet.

Lancaster, S. C.,—July 10.—(Special.)—Textile men from all over the south will gather at Tybee, Ga., for the annual convention of the Southern Textile association on July 16-17, according to Gordon Cobb, secretary, who is vice president of the Lancaster Cotton mills here. Upwards of 500 operating executives from the Carolinas and Georgia and other southern states are expected to attend.

Conditions in the industry at the present time, and the activities of the organization, make this the most important association meeting in years, declared Mr. Cobb in announcing the official program. The theme of the meeting will be the standardization of textile products and processes, upon which the association, comprising the operating heads of the southern mills, has been working for some time.

The convention will be opened on Friday morning by the president, Oscar D. Grimes, of Athens, Ga. Marshall Dilling, of Gastonia, N. C., will deliver the invocation, and John A. McFalls, of Ranlo, N. C., will respond to the welcome of the mayor on behalf of the visitors.

The chief feature of the session will be an address by Robert F. Bowe, assistant vice president, Hunter Manufacturing & Commission company, of New York, whose subject will be "Delivering the Goods." With extended experience as both manufacturer and selling agent, Mr. Bowe is well qualified to discuss the problem of distribution, according to Mr. Cobb.

J. O. Corn, superintendent Pacific Mills, Columbia, S. C., will make the report of the carding division, of which he is chairman. This will cover the first meeting of the division held for the sole purpose of establishing textile standards. The results of the work done have been compiled by Mr. Corn, who will present his findings to the association for confirmation. All standards confirmed at the Tybee meeting will be entered as tentative standards for a year, following which they will be adopted as association standards.

The report of the spinning committee will be made by Chairman Carl R. Harris, assistant superintendent Inman Mills, Inman, S. C. At the committee's last meeting, an effort was made to set up standards for spinning, but as there were more fine yarn spinners present than the print cloth spinners, Mr. Cobb suggested that a North Carolina section be formed, which would enable the fine yarn and knit goods spinners to set up standards for their conditions. Mr. Harris did, however, make considerable progress toward standards common with all numbers, and will make a report on this, it is stated.

C. M. Black, general superintendent Borden Manufacturing company, Goldsboro, N. C., will report on the fine yarn spinners' meeting held in Goldsboro on May 14, and a report also will be heard from the recently organized Rutherford county, N. C., Textile club, which has affiliated with the Southern Textile association.

The report of Secretary Cobb, embracing the general activities of the association during the past year, will be the next feature, and this will be followed by discussion of new inventions and devices, and other subjects.

Banquet on Friday.

The annual banquet of the association will be held on Friday evening at 7:30 o'clock at the Tybee hotel.

Oscar D. Grimes, of Athens, will deliver the president's address at the Saturday morning session, and this will be followed by the report of L. L. Brown, general superintendent Clifton (S. C.) Manufacturing company, as chairman of the weaving division. Mr. Cobb states that this will be a report of the most important weaving meeting ever held, since a start was made toward standards for tolerances in print cloth goods.

Election of officers for the coming year, and the selection of a meeting place for the next convention will be the concluding feature of the Saturday session which will close the convention.

Severe Firing Is Again Heard In Chinese War

Pekin, July 10.—(AP)—A general attack of the "allied" forces on the Kuominchun, or people's army, has been launched near here. Severe fighting is in progress and the sound of gunfire is audible in Pekin.

LINDIG IS NAMED ROYAL HEAD HERE

Harry J. Lindig, formerly heading sales supervision of western Michigan, with headquarters in Grand Rapids, has been appointed manager of the Royal Typewriter company's Atlanta office.

Mr. Lindig's appointment comes from one of the biggest industries of the country recognizing the opportunities of Atlanta, Georgia and the south. After being in the city only a little over a week sizing up the situation, Mr. Lindig makes the rather startling statement that "there is more business to the square foot in Atlanta than in any city in the United States, New York city included."

Price of Milk Varies Widely In Dixie States

Miami, Fla., July 10.—(AP)—A tri-state survey of milk prices in representative Florida, Georgia and South Carolina cities, compiled by the Associated Press and the Miami Daily News, today revealed a range in price from a minimum of 12 1-2 cents a quart in Greenwood, S. C., to a maximum of 35 cents a quart for the certified product in Miami.

The survey was prompted by a review of the milk situation by the Miami chamber of commerce in this city and Dade county, where prices range from 25 to 35 cents a quart according to the variety of the product, due to importation of a large quantity.

Among the Florida cities, Jacksonville, with a price of 21 cents a quart, led the list, followed by Tampa, 22 to 25 cents; St. Augustine, 22 cents; Winter Haven, Clearwater, Sarasota, Bradenton, Fort Lauderdale and Deland, 25 cents; St. Petersburg, 25 to 30 cents, and West Palm Beach, 25 to 30 cents, with 35 cents for certified milk.

Albany led the Georgia cities with a low price of 15 cents, with Columbus, 16 cents; Augusta and Savannah, 18 cents; Atlanta 10 to 20 cents, and Macon, 20 cents.

Not including Greenwood, the South Carolina survey showed Columbia charging 15 cents; Anderson 15 to 20 cents; Greenville and Charleston 18 cents, and Spartanburg 20 cents.

The tri-state prices were shown to compare favorably with prices charged for the product in other representative cities over the country, according to reports received here. Memphis, Tenn., and St. Louis both were reported charging 40 cents a quart for certified milk, 30 to 35 cents in Los Angeles, 28 cents in New York city and from 30 to 35 cents a quart in Boston.

STUDY IS PLANNED OF GRAVITY VALUE AT MAUNA LOA

Washington, July 10.—(AP)—In an effort to throw some light on the causes of volcanic activity and earthquakes on the Hawaiian islands, the coast and geodetic survey will send a party to the islands next December to study the value of gravity at the craters of Kilauea and Mauna Loa, and at the seaport town of Hilo. The party will be in charge of Edwin J. Brown, who also will take part in the longitudinal determinations at Honolulu next October. The gravity determinations are to be made at the request of Dr. T. A. Jaggar, Jr., director of the volcano house at Kilauea, which is under the jurisdiction of the geological survey. An account of the behavior of the lava pool at Kilauea is being kept by Dr. Jaggar, who notes its rise and fall and its degree of explosiveness. He also keeps track of the many earthquakes on the island and is making a study of the rise and fall of the ground in many sections.

PARIS ANARCHISTS WARN DE RIVERA TO STAY AT HOME

Paris, July 10.—(AP)—Anarchist posters warning Premier Primo De Rivera, of Spain, that he would visit Paris at his own peril, were found pasted to walls in all parts of the city this morning. The posters declared that Paris was "no place for dictators."

The police promptly tore the posters down and began combing the capital for anarchists. Every precaution will be taken to protect the Spanish chief from the moment he crosses the frontier. He is coming at the invitation of the French government, and will participate in the ceremony for Bastile day, July 14.

Negro Services Clash With Peddlers Of Watermelons

Washington, July 10.—Watermelons and religion apparently don't mix well—especially around a negro church.

Rev. J. Milton Waldron, pastor of the Shiloh Baptist church, has protested to the district commissioners against hucksters who interrupt Sunday services with loud-voiced cries of "red, ripe watermelon."

The melon peddlers, the negro pastor said, make a "great outcry" to attract attention. He didn't say whether any of his congregation had been lured out by the appeal. The commissioners promised to give due consideration to his complaint.

French Soldiers To Parade Today In Debt Protest

Paris, July 10.—(AP)—Between 20,000 and 50,000 former soldiers of the French army, many of them wounded, will take part in the protest parade tomorrow morning against ratification of the Mellon-Berenger debt agreement. The march will take place with battle flags flying, though not draped in mourning as previously planned, to the Arc de Triomphe, the Alan Seeger monument and the equestrian statue of George Washington, at each of which a wreath will be placed.

The culminating feature of the demonstration will be the setting up of a stone at the foot of the Washington statue with the message carved in French to the people of the United States. The message reads:

"Over the heads of diplomacy and far from political and financial combines the war veterans of France appeal straight to the people of the United States. After the deceptions of peace the proposed debt settlement would consecrate the ruin of France and the loss of its independence.

"America will understand that the war veterans of France, who are honest, sincere and loyal, are asking in a friendly manner that the study of the question should be taken up once more."

The French government withdrew its prohibition order against the parade after it was assured that the parade had no political significance. No American organization will take part, although some members of the American volunteers in the French army may be present at the Alan Seeger monument in a private capacity.

The parade will form in the Avenue George V and march to the Arc de Triomphe, thence to the Allan Seeger statue in the Place des Etats Unis and then to the George Washington monument in the Place D'Iena. After the three wreaths are deposited the paraders will disband.

M. Durand and Jourdain, members of the cabinet, explained at a cabinet meeting this morning why the ban against the demonstration had been removed. Americans in Paris, they said, in general were of the opinion that the veterans were quite logical in protesting, but were annoyed at the wording of the posters which had been distributed throughout the country describing the Washington agreement as the "calvary of the victors," and the statement that the debts had been reduced only 5 per cent.

RUMANIAN KING REFUSES TO LET QUEEN BOB HAIR

Bucharest, July 10.—All Rumanian society women are bobbing or shingling their hair and even Queen Maria is being urged to follow their example.

She would like to do so, but the king refuses to allow her to clip her beautiful chestnut brown tresses, on the ground that it would ill become one who has to wear a crown. The queen, however, has allowed her ladies-in-waiting and her daughters to fall in with the prevalent fashion if they so desire.

Some of the barbers of Bucharest have closed their doors to men on the ground that their profits from shaving and hair cutting are little or nothing compared to what they are able to charge the ever growing number of women who desire their hair bobbed, banged, shingled or dyed.

KANSAS CITY STAR TO BE SOLD JULY 15

Kansas City, July 10.—(AP)—Trustees of the William Rockhill Nelson trust spent all day today interviewing prospective purchasers of the Kansas City Star and Times and analyzing eight offers for the property laid before them yesterday. Preparatory to making a definite award next Thursday.

The conferences were mainly to clear up technical questions concerning the offer, no revisions being permitted, it was said. No announcements were made as to the identity of the eight prospective buyers or the amounts offered.

Those who announced that they had submitted offers are: F. G. Bonfils, publisher of the Denver Post; Luke Lea, of the Nashville Tennessean; Walter S. Dickey, owner of the Kansas City Journal Post, Frank E. Gannett, owner of the Rochester, N. Y., Times-Union, and Irwin Kirkwood, editor of the Kansas City Star.

Clyde M. Reed, former chairman of the Kansas public utility commission and editor of the Parsons Sun, was in conference with the trustees several times yesterday and again today, but would not say whether he had made an offer. Several prominent publishers made inquiries about the sale of the property, but did not appear before the trustees yesterday when bids were received. These include Ralph Booth, head of a chain of newspapers in Michigan operated by the Booth Publishing company, in Detroit; Herschel V. Jones, owner of the Minneapolis Journal; Roy W. Howard, of the Scripps-Howard newspapers, Frank P. Glass, of St. Louis, formerly one of the owners of the St. Louis Star and Elzey Roberts, one of the present owners of the St. Louis Star.

Dawes Prepares To Reopen Fight For Rule Changes

Chicago, July 10.—(AP)—Vice President and Mrs. Charles G. Dawes returned to Chicago today for the summer, the former ready for a few speeches later in continuance of his campaign for revision of the senate rules. The vice president came from Boston after an address at Salem, Mass. He and Mrs. Dawes were greeted at the station by the adopted daughter, Virginia, and his banking associates.

A shadow hung over the vice president's reunion with his children because Merigo, the family's wire-haired Irish terrier, died this morning.

The vice president brought news that he, like the president, had caught a fish—a pickerel, hooked at Kennebunkport, Maine, where he spent several days at the home of Kenneth L. Roberts.

Dawes plans to rest at Evanston until August 1. He will speak at Denver, followed by ten days of fishing at the ranch of Colonel A. E. Humphries in Colorado.

Admiral Marshall Dies.

STATE FARM BODY TO MEET AT DAWSON

Dawson, Ga., July 10.—(Special.)—The Georgia State Agricultural society will hold its annual meeting in Dawson on August 3-4.

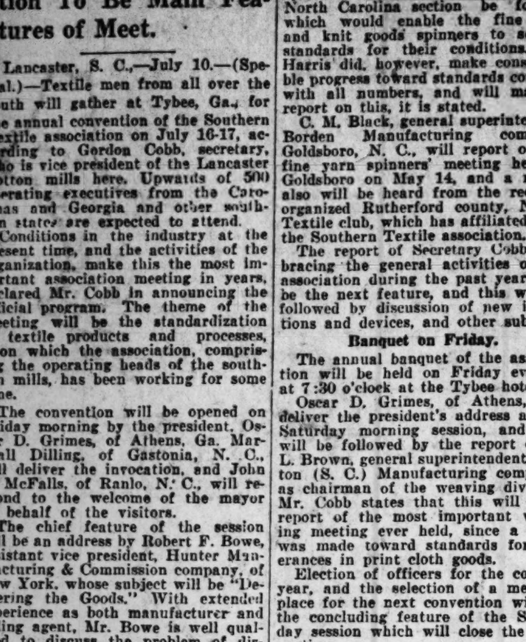

The society is perhaps the oldest farm organization in the south, having been organized in 1810 and active in the agricultural development of the state since that time. The organization has members in all sections of the state and will afford Dawson and Terrell county a wonderful opportunity to show the visitors some of the large farms of this community.

The morning sessions will be devoted to addresses and the afternoons will be given over to visiting the various demonstrations of the fertilizer for cotton on the several Terrel county farms.

It has been planned to entertain the delegates with a barbecue dinner on August 4.

Judge P. W. Meldrim, of Savannah, is the president and A. E. Gibson, of Dawson, is secretary and H. A. Pettv, of Dawson, is on the executive committee. The Kiwania club at the last meeting pledged its support in making the event a great one for Terrell county.

Moscow.—It's the aches and pains of hitherto used muscles and cerebral prowess are bothering the moujik, says the chairman of the soviet supreme economic council. Former officers in the A. E. F., will sympathize with his complaint that Russian bureaucracy is drowning in "red tape and endless writing."

DAVISON-PAXON-STOKES CO.

By the way—

It is interesting to note that almost all of the Candlewick bed spreads sold in America are made in and around Dalton, Georgia. This is only one of the things concerning Georgia that very few of her citizens know much about.

It is also interesting to note that Macy's in New York do such a large business on Candlewick bed spreads that the buyer of that department is coming to Atlanta on Monday, July 12, for the sole purpose of going to Dalton, Georgia, to place Fall orders for Candlewick bed spreads, for which there is a great demand in the Northern and Eastern parts of the country, although there is little demand for them in Atlanta.

This makes us wonder whether this quaint, simple Colonial bed spread is not a little bit like the prophet that has no honor in his own country.

In case you have forgotten how attractive and inexpensive these Candlewick bed spreads are we have them in variety at $3.95.

General Impetus Given to Development Activities. Enlarged Building Program Announced.

With announcement Saturday of new high records for sales in Avondale Estates, Atlanta's new suburban city—net figures for the month of June assembled by John H. Byrley, general manager, showing a total of $265,649.47—a general impetus has been given to development activities in the new suburb and an enlarged program has been announced.

The record included sales of lots totalling $205,599.47, and sales of homes totalling $60,500. Two dwellings were sold 30 days in advance of completion, giving evidence of a demand for homes in the new suburb. The same circumstance has marked the sale of two homes since July 1, the figures for which are not included in the June total.

June figures included those of the record breaking week in which sale of lots totalled $82,500, without including the sale of two homes, contracts for which were closed that week.

Complete Paving By Nov. 1.

Assurance that the lake and golf section of Avondale Estates, comprising the second unit of the new suburban city, will be completely paved by November 1, giving to the new suburb 14 miles of street frontage paved and improved with sidewalks, curbing, water mains, and sewerage, was given Saturday by the Meador Construction company, which has been awarded the contract.

The project undertaken by the construction company, of paving and improving the lake and golf section, with more than seven miles of street frontage—a longer stretch of improved streets than possessed by most cities of 5,000 or more people—has called for assembly of a large equipment of modern machinery and a construction staff of size sufficient to handle the big job in a few months.

The first unit, with seven miles of street frontage, has been completely paved and the streets improved.

With November 1 set as the date for completion of the paving, many of the streets of the lake and golf section will be completely paved before the end of the summer, and the extensive home building that has followed paving in every other part of the new suburb is expected to develop there also.

Landscape Crews Busy.

As fast as the streets are paved, landscaping crews are to be set to work under direction of C. M. Huff, the landscape gardener and engineer of the Avondale development, and the section will be graded, levelled and adorned with shrubs, trees and flowering plants from the huge Avondale nursery, in readiness for the erection of homes.

In line with the increased development activity of Avondale Estates, the home building program has been enlarged, with plans announced in the last few days for new homes in addition to the schedule of a minimum of 100 homes in Avondale in 1926, undertaken by the Flagler company. Three homes have been planned by S. L. Adams, six by Hoke N. Smith, three by Charles H. Black, and others by E. M. Moffett, Ben S. Forkner and other property owners in the new suburb.

All these plans, as well as the work of completing the new business block, with its added facilities for eight establishments; the erection of the old English type bathing casino in the wooded spot at the head of Lake Avondale; the construction of tennis courts and other items of development, have been spurred by the sales activities, which reached a new high mark in the month of June.

Howard C. McCutcheon Announces Candidacy For Council Position

GOSSETT ENTERS RACE FOR CITY COUNCILMAN

The list of candidates for the councilmanic post now held by Cecil G. Allen, of the second ward, continued to swell Saturday night, when Albert W. Gossett, 28, threw his hat into the political melee, bringing the total number who have announced their intention to enter the field up to four.

Others are John W. Bolton, the only one who up to Saturday night had qualified by paying entrance fee; Howard C. McCutcheon and J. L. Poole.

Mr. Gossett, in making his announcement, declared he would offer a progressive, economical platform, and that he will seek strict enforcement of the law. He was born and reared in Atlanta, and is recording secretary of the Bricklayers' union, No. 14, of Atlanta. He is a member of St. Philip's cathedral.

"I stand squarely for clean politics and enforcement of the law," the newest candidate declared. "There is too much dickering with the law and justice, and I will fight any attempt to influence the courts of the city if elected."

INSECTS TERMED MORE DISASTROUS TO MAN THAN WAR

Calculated in human lives, depredations of the cockroach, bedbug, house fly, mosquito, flea and other insects, are a hundred times greater each year than the fatalities from wars, calamities and accidents, according to Major M. A. Reasoner, sanitation and health expert of the United States army medical corps. More diseases among human beings are transmitted by these insects than by any other means. They are the indirect cause of millions of deaths throughout the world which might be prevented could these disease carriers be killed off completely and their breeding places wiped out.

In the malaria-infected districts of the United States, southern Europe and the tropics the fight against this disease has long since centered on the mosquito breeding places, for this insect has been known to be the exclusive carrier of the malady. Although the consumption of quinine for the treatment of malaria runs into tons, the killing off of the mosquitoes, both inside the house and out, has proved the most effective preventive and public health authorities are now urging a ruthless warfare on this and all other insects which infest human habitations.

For years the reason for screening houses and fighting insects with insecticides has been for the sake of comfort chiefly. The average layman has seen in the mosquito, the cockroach, the bedbug, the house fly and other insects only a buzzing or crawling nuisance. As a menacing disease carrier, the army medical department and municipal and federal health departments have always dealt with the insect accordingly.

Insects mean potential disease, say health authorities, and to eliminate them is to protect health. The Selig company recommends Se-Fly-Go for killing the living, flying or crawling bug. First spray Se-Fly-Go, the scientific insecticide with the "kindly odor and killer instinct," regularly in and about dwellings and nearby buildings, especially in crevices, molding and other places which insects frequent, thoroughly covering the breeding places if they can be located. For the killing of eggs and other forms before they are fully developed, spraying with an insecticide or a disinfectant in suspected places such as stagnant pools of water, around drains and the like has proven effective. An egg or insect killed early in the spring means that some several thousand descendants will be automatically eliminated from their disease-carrying ventures during the warm months of the summer.

COLONELS LAHM AND GILLMORE TO BE PROMOTED

Washington, July 10.—(AP)—Promotion of Lieutenant Colonels William E. Gillmore and Frank P. Lahm, of the army air service, to the grade of brigadier generals, is understood to have been recommended to Secretary Davis by Major General Patrick, chief of the air service.

Under the air bill creating the two additional generals Colonel Lahm would have charge of air service operations and be placed in command of Kelley Field, Texas, while Colonel Gillmore would become supply officer and continue his present station at headquarters here.

The recommendations of the air service chief were submitted to Secretary Davis early last Saturday in time for him, had he chosen to do so, to forward them through the white house to the senate for confirmation before congress adjourned. Davis, however, held that there was no occasion for such quick action since the posts could be filled through recess appointments.

BOND IS ALLOWED WOMAN SENTENCED ON ARSON CHARGE

Hopkinsville, Ky., July 10.—(AP)—Mrs. Ora Lee Henderson Thacker, recently sentenced to five years for arson, was released from jail here today on bond of $500 to arrange an appeal. A stay of sentence until September 1 for the same purpose was granted by Judge Charles H. Bush.

Mrs. Thacker was arrested five months ago in connection with the death of her second husband, Lewis Robert "Scrap" Thacker.

Developments in connection with the case caused her to be indicted for poisoning her first husband four years previously but she was acquitted of the charge. She is still before the grand jury in connection with the death of her second husband.

RUMANIA QUEEN DRIVES ENGINE 50 MILES AN HOUR

Resita, Rumania, July 10.—(AP)—The versatile Queen Marie of Rumania has surprised her subjects with a display of mechanical skill by driving a locomotive at 50 miles an hour.

The engine, the first ever built in Rumania, was the product of the great Metallurgical Works at Resita, formerly belonging to the Austrians.

Queen Marie christened the locomotive then, garbed in a blue duster, leather gloves and high boots, climbed into the cab and drove the huge machine about three miles with the chief engineer of the Resita plant at her side. The king and prime minister, General Averescu, also were in the cab.

Afterward the queen declared that "driving a locomotive is far more exciting and harder work than merely steering an automobile."

Requests for Catalogs At Lucy Cobb Indicate Increased Attendance

Athens, Ga., July 10.—(AP)—An unprecedented number of requests for catalogues indicates that Lucy Cobb institute here will have an "overflow house" when the new session opens this fall, President W. F. Hollingsworth has announced.

He said that the dormitory, which houses comfortably 60 students, will be filled doubtless far in advance of the opening of the new term. Plans are being discussed among the alumnae, trustees and president of the institution for a new dormitory, and President Hollingsworth said that a statement on this subject will be forthcoming soon.

Preparatory to the opening of the 1926-1927 session, the executive committee of the board of trustees has authorized extensive improvements in the equipment and physical condition of the dormitory. When school opens the building will have been done over completely on the inside with paint and paper, and new furnishings added where needed, Dr. Hollingsworth said. The campus of the school will also have been improved.

Illinois School Bars Students Owning Autos

(By Leased Wire to The Constitution and The Chicago Tribune.)

Urbana, Ill., July 10.—Believing that the student operation of automobiles is detrimental to scholastic standing and contributes to moral delinquencies in addition to involving a constant and serious waste of time, the council of administration at the University of Illinois today announced a regulation has been adopted barring the student operation of automobiles at the state coeducational institution, effective September 1.

A letter citing five reasons for barring automobiles at the state institution is being mailed by the council of administration to the parents and guardians of all students scheduled to reenter the university next fall and to the prospective freshmen students who are applying for admission. The reasons advanced are:

1. The scholastic standing maintained by the majority of students owning or operating automobiles has been below the average scholastic standing of the university.
2. The owning of automobiles has involved a constant and serious waste of time.
3. There have been numerous accidents involving considerable damage and serious bodily injury.
4. There are constant violations of local and state laws governing motor traffic, and a wholly unnecessary and dangerous congestion of traffic in streets adjacent to the campus.
5. The use of cars has contributed to moral delinquencies which have resulted in the dismissal from the university of the students concerned.

Business Governor Needed, Dr. Hardman Points Out

Georgia needs a business administration and a business man as governor, according to Dr. L. G. Hardman in a statement issued Saturday.

In his state Dr. Hardman said that "machine politicians" should not be permitted to dominate Georgia's affairs. He quotes many authorities in support of his statement that a business man should head the state as governor.

The statement follows:

"There has been more or less comment for a number of years that Georgia needs a business administration.

"Regardless of how sincere or true this may have been or may be now, it is true that business affairs from the individual to the state capitol could be materially benefitted by the application of sound business methods. The individual—the laborer, the producer, the manufacturer, the banker, the merchant—as well as almost any other enterprise could be materially helped by the application of sound business principles which would retard waste, would supply economic principles, would give to all more or less prosperity, happiness and contentment.

Business Needs Head.

"Every business enterprise of endeavor must have its head, or among its directing corps someone that must stay inside of, within and under an application of the fundamental business principles, if it succeeds.

"There are only two sides—success and failure. One brings prosperity and happiness; the other waste and want. How shall we determine the ability and qualifications, as well as the fitness, of these leaders in order that we may select a leader or director?

"I present here quotations from some of the best authorities, viz:

"Solomon, Elbert Hubbard and others. 'Lest, thou a man diligent in his business, he shall stand before kings.'

"'A business man is one who gets the business and completes the transaction.'

"'To be a business man implies that you are orderly, systematic, exact, competent, reliable; that you keep your promise and expect others to do the same; that you are on time; that you pay your debts; that you put idle men to work and see that they do the job properly and well.'

"'A business man does business on animation and enthusiasm, and when these are destroyed the dark ages are upon us.

"'A business man is one who gets 100 cents out of a dollar in an honest way. He eliminates from all business transactions extravagance and graft; he eliminates the unnecessary burdens. He sees that only the necessary income of taxation is secured to operate the state. He sees that investments and expenditures are safe and wisely made. He eliminates all unnecessary overhead expenses.'

Defines Business Man.

"A business man is a man of integrity, of reverence, truth and honesty. These qualities are fundamental, and upon them must be based his transactions. The world's greatest prize in the future will go on to the business man. The business man is our only scientist, and to him we must look for the science of economics, which will eradicate poverty, ignorance, disease, superstition and all that dissipates and destroys.

"The day is dawning, we are moving fast toward the age of business men. Even the lawyers, some of them, are beginning to realize that conservative business is the wisest policy. We need business men at the head of this government, not attorneys or political parties.

"J. Piermont Morgan said: 'I will loan any man a million dollars.' Here was a great poetic truth, but a truth just the same. Only an honest man can borrow money today, collateral or no collateral. We loan money on clear eyes, good teeth, good habits and honest purpose.

"The world of commerce is just as honorable as the world of art, and a trifle more necessary. Art exists on the surplus that business men accumulate. Art and literature subsist on the sufferance, patronage and encouragement business men supply. Business means taking things from where they are plentiful to where they are needed. Business means making things make things people want.

"President VanHise is a student and a teacher of economics. He is not a capitalist, as he intimates. Our politicians are not so much interested in the welfare of the people as doing what politics demands.

Truth, Right Relegated.

"The primal thing with them is victory; truth and right are relegated to the rag bag. Votes are the needful thing, and the vote of an ignoramus is worth just as much as the vote of a man of intelligence. Anything that catches the attention of the ignorant voter is condoned under the excuse of politics.

"He who would do a great work would be free from fetters, and must not be tied up by political promises.

"It has also been said, and is claimed today, that the politician, the machine organization, is dominating the affairs of Georgia, and will be victorious in the coming election.

"What is the basis upon which these politicians stand? They hold positions under the state, which they have a right to do. They are using the state's money, for the department of state highways and the department of agriculture, provided that it has been spent and is spent in keeping with the laws providing for the distribution of the same.

"We believe in good roads, and want more of them. We believe in agriculture, and want better service. We submit, however, is it in keeping with the laws of this state, with the laws of righteousness and fairness, that these departments and these funds shall be used, either directly or indirectly for the promotion and ambition of any candidate?

Raps "Machinery."

"I take it that there is no one familiar with the political situation and agitation today who will not conceive this statement—that the political machinery of Georgia, either in road mileage or unwarranted statements, and through the newspapers, is undertaking to place in the governor's chair its own candidate, and that this is not fair and not in keeping with the best interests of the state.

"If this is not true, let these candidates resign from their positions and put themselves on the same basis as any other candidates seeking the governorship of Georgia. Is it just that they shall hold onto their positions and receive their salaries, asking their supporters—men paid by the state and who travel on state mileage—and if it is not true that they are doing this let them come out in the open and give everybody a fair show.

"Many a good man is receiving pay and mileage from the state, and I do not criticize them for it, but I do not believe that it is fair, that it is right, that it is just, that it is freedom, that it is liberty for them to turn their organizations into a political machine to tie up the voters of this state.

"This is a day when we need liberty, which means freedom of thought, freedom of action and freedom to vote for any man that you believe can give the best service.

(Signed) "L. G. HARDMAN."

CHICAGO PREPARES ROUSING WELCOME FOR ATLANTA GIRL

Chicago is preparing a big reception for Miss Trinx Jackson, of Atlanta, and nine other members of the John Murray Anderson production of "Charleston" which will fill an engagement during the week at a Chicago theater, according to a dispatch received Saturday by The Constitution. Miss Jackson was winner of The Constitution-Publix theater "Charleston" beauty tournament held here last June.

The girls are now in Detroit and will close their engagement in that city Sunday night. While in Detroit they were entertained at the home of John Kunskey, prominent Detroit theatrical manager. The girls were taken for a trip on the Detroit river and drove several famous speed boats up that stream.

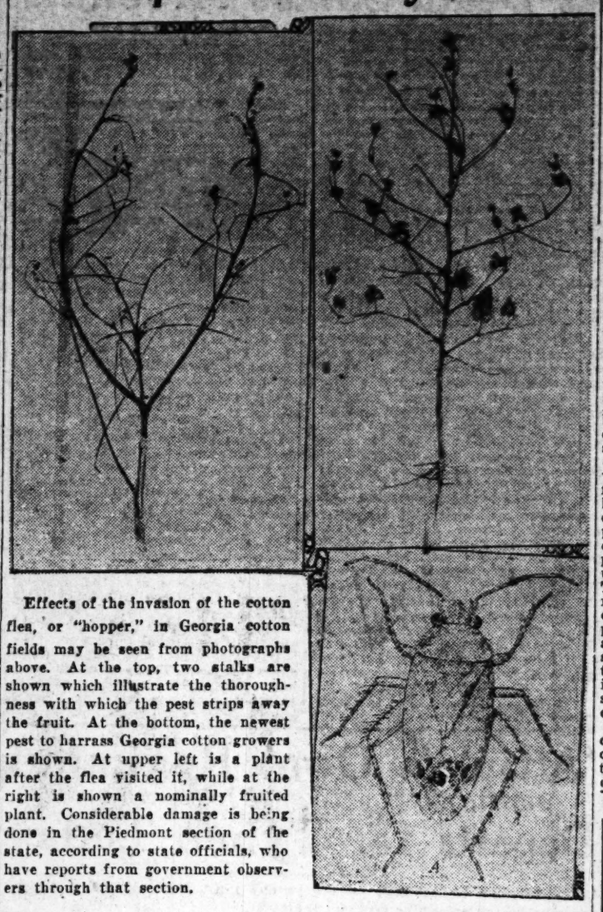

Miss Jackson is studying dancing while on the trip and will perfect several new Charleston steps prior to her appearance in Atlanta at the Howard theater the week of September 8.

Cotton Flea Infestation Reported Heavy in State

Effects of the invasion of the cotton flea, or "hopper," in Georgia cotton fields may be seen from photographs above. At the top, two stalks are shown which illustrate the thoroughness with which the pest strips away the fruit. At the bottom, the newest pest to harrass Georgia cotton growers is shown. At upper left is a plant after the flea visited it, while at the right is shown a nominally fruited plant. Considerable damage is being done in the Piedmont section of the state, according to state officials, who have reports from government observers through that section.

Heavy infestation of cotton fields by the cotton flea or cotton "hopper" in the Piedmont section of Georgia and in the section surrounding Sumter county is reported by the United States department of agriculture in a bulletin issued Saturday by George A. Maloney, associate entomologist.

According to this statement the cotton "hopper" has appeared in several southern states and is causing heavy damage. The flea eats the cotton square to such an extent that it decays and falls off the cotton plant, thus causing much loss of the staple. The flea has been reported in Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Louisiana, Georgia and North and South Carolina. Slight damage has been done by the pest in Tennessee and Alabama, also, according to the report.

Dr. Maloney recommends use of sulphur as a remedy to check the spread of this pest. In his statement he said superfine dusting sulphur should be used. He also said sulphur should be used at the rate of 10 pounds to the acre. The applications should be made in the same manner that calcium arsenate is applied to kill the boll weevil.

Outlining the use of sulphur and its effect, Dr. Maloney gives the following statement:

"The action of the sulphur on the insects is not entirely understood but undoubtedly the formation of sulphur gas in the fields is a very important factor in the killing. It has been found that the effect is comparatively gradual; that is, while some of the insects die in a short time, the killing continues for several days after the application. Furthermore, the hoppers in their feeding on the plant have injected some form of poison which causes a continued blasting of squares for some time after the hoppers have been killed out. Apparently, the number of blasted squares often does not diminish for at least five days and some squares will continue to die for at least 10 days or two weeks. Experience this season has shown that the fields suffering medium damage began retaining a higher percentage of squares within about four or five days after the first application and were greatly improved in fruiting within a week. It will be plain from the above that the farmer should not expect to dust his fields with sulphur and have the insects disappear immediately. So far, the hoppers have not been eradicated in any instance and there are always some present in the most heavily dusted fields, but proper dusting has reduced the number below the point of damage.

"A very important point for consideration in those districts where the boll weevil is active is the effect of this outbreak on the weevil problem. Of course, the extreme western areas probably have little or nothing to fear from the weevil this season, but over much of the remainder of the belt there is an average infestation of weevils present. Under ordinary conditions this would not be a very grave menace, but the problem is completely changed by the activity of the hopper. In the first place, the few squares which are escaping the hopper at present cannot be spared and thus every one of them punctured by the weevil represents that much loss, whereas, under ordinary conditions, a certain amount of weevil puncturing merely replaces natural shedding and does not cause loss. In addition, the best that can be expected is the setting of a very late crop of cotton. The first bred generation of the weevils are just now maturing in a considerable portion of the belt, and thus the weevils are that much ahead of the cotton fruiting and damage will be accentuated. In many sections, where the injury has been most severe, it is going to be necessary to make the cotton crop during the period of weevil migration and this is the most serious problem of all. For these reasons, where weevils are at all prevalent in the fields it is advisable to make combined applications of sulphur and calcium arsenate to control both the hopper and the weevil. In such fields eight pounds of sulphur and four pounds of calcium arsenate should be used per acre for each application. This material should be thoroughly mixed before putting it in the hopper of the dusting machine and then 12 pounds per acre of the mixture applied as recommended above. When the sulphur dusting has been continued to the extent of controlling the hopper infestation, straight calcium arsenate should be used as necessary for weevil control.

"When sulphur is used for dusting cotton for control of the hopper great care should be exercised to avoid contact of a flame of any kind with the dust cloud produced by the dusting machine, sulphur dust being highly inflammable. Should the sulphur dust could as it is expelled from dusting machine become ignited, there is liability of this flame reaching the dusting machine and causing explosion of the dust within the hopper, which might result seriously to the driver of the machine, as well as to the animals. Under no circumstances should sulphur dust be applied to cotton with dusting machinery operated by a gasoline engine."

DOTY WILL FACE COURT JULY 16

Damascus, Syria, July 10.—(AP)—Bennett J. Doty, of Memphis, Tenn., young American member of the French foreign legion in Syria will face a court martial on charges of desertion on July 16.

The young American, who enlisted in the legion as "Gilbert Clare," has been in the citadel of Damascus since June 5. The formal charge against him accuses him of abandoning his post "before armed rebels."

James M. Harvey, an English member of the legion, who is accused of leaving his post at the same time as Doty will be tried on the same date.

The French judge advocate, Captain Fugney, has conducted an exhaustive investigation into the affairs because of what he terms the "wild reports" sent to the United States by some American correspondents during the first week in June, when Doty was reported as having been already tried and executed.

It is expected that Doty will not suffer anything more serious than a brief prison sentence.

HOMESICKNESS CAUSED DESERTION, SAYS DOTY.

In a recent interview with a correspondent for the Associated Press at the Citadel prison in Damascus, young Doty said that it was homesickness which caused him to leave his company while actively engaged against the Druses. He pointed vigorously to the citations which he had received in battle as proof that he was no coward and told the correspondent that he hoped to serve out his enlistment and recover his honor as a soldier. Although admitting that he had left the company, Doty said that he surrendered voluntarily as soon as he realized his breach of military rules.

Endangered by Explosion

New York, July 10.—(AP)—Frank A. Gale, Mont Clair, N. J., tonight described the explosion of the naval ammunition depot at Lake Denmark, N. J., as he witnessed it from Oakridge, N. J., 15 miles distant. The first indication of an accident was the appearance over the Sparta mountains, which separate Okridge and Newfoundland, N. J., from the valley in which the arsenal is located, of a huge cloud of white smoke.

A sharp explosion, deafeningly loud, followed the appearance of the cloud. Immediately afterward a thundering rumble and blasing shook the ground. A brilliant cloud of flame spread over the sky in the direction of the arsenal. A second and heavier explosion followed almost immediately.

The rumbling continued without intermission until some 40 minutes later when a third explosion spread another brilliant flame across the sky. This explosion was not as intense as the two which preceded it.

Rumbling Lasts Hours.

The rumbling continued for almost two hours after the first explosion, punctuated at brief intervals by sharp reports as of bombs and mines.

Mr. Gale said that the villages of Oakridge and Newfoundland suffered little damage from falling debris as they were protected by the mountain ridge. He added that he feared greatly for the lives of numbers of children in summer camps in the vicinity of the arsenals.

Mr. Gale expressed the opinion that if lightning caused the original explosion it was literally "a bolt from the blue." He said that the storm which had broken over the territory some time previously had quieted to a gentle rain and that the western sky was clearing rapidly when the first blast came.

The Western Union telegraph operator at Dover, N. J., four miles from the arsenals, told Mr. Gale that the town of Dover suffered little damage, also due to a protecting ridge intervening. The operator, Mr. Gale said, reported that he "had accounted for 100 dead among the military stationed at the arsenals and inhabitants of nearby towns."

People Leave Homes.

Mr. Gale said that persons dwelling within a radius of 15 miles of the arsenals were leaving as rapidly as possible because of reports that there still remained a large magazine at the naval ammunition depot which had not yet exploded.

Mr. Gale said that reports reaching Oakridge were that the villages of Mount Hope and Denmark on the outskirts of which the arsenal is situated, were totally destroyed and that several summer camps in the vicinity also were levelled.

WELCOME FOR BOBBY GAINS MOMENTUM

governor's horse guard will protect these priceless trophies.

Then, falling into line behind the truck, Atlantans—golfers and non-golfers—will march afoot, paying tribute to the youth who personifies the greatest achievements of the links. Every man and every woman in Atlanta who has ever swung a driver, missed a putt or cussed a caddy is expected to walk in the parade. Every Atlantan who doesn't play golf is expected to be on hand.

Al Doonan, who was named by Scott Hudson, of the Athletic club, to have charge of the festivities, requests all who go to the station to welcome Bobby to stay outside on the plaza instead of trying to crowd into the station itself.

"It will be an impressive sight," Mr. Doonan said, "if all who wish to welcome Bobby remain outside, to tear loose the greatest volume of cheering this old city has ever heard the moment Bobby emerges from the station into the sunlight of the plaza steps."

Wild Excitement.

When the news of Bobby's achievement was received at the Atlanta Athletic club Saturday real "bedlam" broke loose. Club members cheered and shouted and slapped each other on the back amid the wildest excitement.

In the whole history of the club no more enthusiastic celebration ever took place in its walls. The cheering began immediately after the news of Bobby's score was received and was in progress intermittently during the rest of the evening.

Official Atlanta extended felicitations Saturday night when Claude S. Buchanan, acting mayor wired as a city official and as a member of the Sigma Alpha Epsilon national scholastic fraternity congratulating Bobby Jones on his most recent triumph.

"Hail Caesar."

"When Bobby steps from the train today his will be an entry even more triumphant than the return of Caesar following a hard-fought, well-earned victory," Buchanan declared. "Atlanta is proud of her own son and justly so because he has brought fame and honor to his native land, his state and his home town. Our police band, in full uniform, will be at the terminal station to greet the conquering hero and our motorcycle officers will lead the parade which will follow. The citizens of Atlanta will in this manner try to express to Bobby their extreme pleasure and congratulations on his victory," Mr. Buchanan concluded.

Scott Hudson, president of the Atlanta Athletic club, was delighted at news of Bobby's latest accomplishment.

"We fellows at the Athletic club have known for years that Bobby Jones was the best golfer in the whole world," he said. "We are deeply gratified that Bobby now has demonstrated this fact to the satisfaction of everybody who knows a niblick from a tee."

Record for All Time.

Al Doonan, member of the board of the Atlanta Athletic club, declared that Bobby's exploit probably will set a record for all times.

"It's marvelous, wonderful," he said. "Bobby, after winning the American amateur title over a field of the nation's strongest amateurs, goes to England and sweeps the British open title before the world's strongest professional and amateur golfers. Then he sails for home, immediately enters the American open and, by playing with a gameness never before equalled, forges to victory over a second great field of amateurs and professionals to win the American open. Atlantans are experiencing something the like of which never has been experienced before and probably never will experience again."

"Just Plain Bobby."

Perry Adair, one of Bob's closest "side-kicks," who grew up with the famous Atlanta golfer, was happy Saturday over Bob's achievement.

"This thing has been coming to Bobby for four or five years and only some of the toughest kind of breaks kept him from winning it before," Mr. Adair said. "We can't say too much in praise of Bobby Jones and one of the best things about it is that Bobby is still just plain Bobby, no matter how many championships he wins."

S. Guyt McLendon, secretary of state, speaking on behalf of Georgia in place of Governor Clifford Walker, who was out of the city, said that Georgia should consider "Bobby" one of her greatest assets.

"I congratulate Bobby Jones," said Mr. McLendon, "on having overcome all golfing rivals by his skill, and on having won the admiration of the entire world by his character."

Chamber Greeting.

"I am just so delighted I can't say much," said President W. D. Hoffman, of the chamber of commerce. "My feelings are beyond expression—I'm simply delighted—say anything you like for me—and it can't possibly tell half what I feel. The chamber of commerce is stunned with pride over Bobby. We'll be at the Terminal station in full force and we'll greet him, as we did in New York, with an ardor that will dim the glorious march down Broadway, even. We'll have a truck and anything else we can think of to add emphasis to our sentiments. We hesitate to congratulate him, because it seems so tame, when everybody else is doing it, but what else is there to do? Tell us, and we'll do it."

J. J. Haverty, one of Atlanta's leading business men and instigator of a subscription to pay for a portrait of Bobby, by one of America's greatest living artists, to hang in Atlanta's new permanent museum of art, drew attention to some of the splendid characteristics that have marked Bobby Jones' career.

"He is modest, genial, a real American," said Mr. Haverty, "and we ought to be proud of him. Of course, he is the best ever in his line, he is at the top, with none to equal him and I doubt if anyone will ever be produced to equal his record of achievement on the links.

"Glorious Native Son."

"I not only congratulate Bobby, I congratulate Atlanta and Georgia as the birthplace and native state of such a glorious native son. Everybody ought to contribute to the cost of the portrait we are having painted, and which is to be hung in the new museum of art, in time for the formal opening. The museum, you know, will open with a great exhibition by the Grand Central Galleries, beginning October 17, and we should complete the subscription list, have the portrait painted, so that everyone who attends the exhibition can see the portrait of Georgia's most famous son first when they enter the doors.

W. O. Cheney, principal of Tech High school, Bobby Jones' alma mater, joined other Atantans in congratulating "the greatest golfer of the world." "He was a very fine student, exceptionally bright in mathematics and completed his high school course in three years," Mr. Cheney said, "and was as good in his studies as he was in golf." All of Tech High school and I more especially, because I had the pleasure of teaching Bobby, am proud of the great young Atlanta golfer."

Hero of the Hour.

"Bobby Jones is the hero of the hour," declared G. F. Willis, developer of Avondale Estates, upon learning of the golfer's triumph. "I believe every American is proud of him and every Atlantan should be at the station today to greet him. Bobby's father expressed my sentiment when he said his son had the gamest heart God ever put in a sportsman."

"The victory of Atlanta's world-famed golfer is her best advertisement," said John W. Grant, prominent capitalist. "His spectacular playing Saturday and his winnings abroad will do more good than the $250,000 national advertising campaign. I am delighted."

"When Bobby Jones staged the great come-back and won the high golfing honors Saturday, he typified the Atlanta spirit," stated Robert F. Maddox, former president of the National Bankers' association and well-known financier. Atlanta has risen from defeats suffered by the civil war and such things like this demonstrate what can be accomplished if one has the goods to deliver."

Big Boost for Atlanta.

"Such laurels won by an Atlantan cannot fail to boost the home city of the world's greatest golfer," said Asa G. Candler, Jr., prominent business man. "Atlanta is justly proud of her hero."

"I'm too delighted for words," asserted John K. Ottley, prominent banker, Saturday afternoon upon learning of Bobby Jones' great victory. "I think it's wonderful. I am extremely delighted and enthusiastic over his latest achievement. Atlanta as a city should be extremely appreciative that she has a gentleman with such popularity in sport life throughout the world. Everything they do to welcome him and in extending to him sincere congratulations, I am 100 per cent in accord."

"Peeping Tom" Suspect Sought To Rent House; Police Furnish Quarters

Night time and more especially the hour of 9:30 o'clock is not a reasonable time to "inspect" vacant houses with a view to renting.

That fact was established Saturday night, when G. W. Bell, 44, of 151 Hunnicutt street, was arrested by Call Officers A. F. Duncan and M. D. Cartwright on a charge of being a "peeping Tom." His bond was assessed at $100 and a hearing will be given him in recorder's court Monday.

Bell, according to the police, was arrested in a vacant house on Luckie street, on complaint of several residents of the section. When questioned Bell told officers he was looking for a place to move and was inspecting the house.

The club house will have a setting of natural beauty and will compare favorably with America's finest club houses. It will have loggias, ball room, broad-terraced verandas, dancing pavilions, dining room and outdoor tea gardens.

Plans for the golf course, which were announced Saturday, are probably the outstanding features of the club. The course will be laid out and designed by a master golf engineer. It will be "unexcelled for natural beauty and abundant hazards will feature the course," it is stated.

POLICE SEEK NEGRO IN CRIMINAL ATTACK

Police and detectives are combing the city for an unidentified negro man who is said to have attacked a white woman on Greensferry avenue late Saturday afternoon. A good description of the negro was furnished police, who stated there will be no let-up in the search until the negro is landed in jail.

An automobile tour of the state will follow.

Blast Tears Rubber Boots From Marine

Private Weaver Declares "It Felt Like Touch of Hell."

Paterson, N. J., July 10.—(AP)—Marine Private James M. Weaver, 19, of Birmingham, Ala., who with two other marines was found running on a mountain road near Oak Ridge after the arsenal explosion today, was brought to Paterson general hospital by Harry Barkley, a motor vehicle inspector.

The upper portion of Weaver's body was a mass of cuts and bruises and about his bleeding feet was wrapped the remnants of a shirt.

The other marines did not appear to be seriously injured, Barkley said, and he left them by the roadside after calming them.

Weaver told physicians that he had just returned from a week-end leave and was in the act of changing his clothing when fire call was sounded. The blaze was believed to be trivial, and he with five or six others responded with a hose cart.

He did not recall what building was on fire, but when they got into action the first of the magazines blew up. He saw his companions hurled 15 feet in the air. The concussion tore the rubber boots from one of the marines, he said.

When he recovered sufficiently from the shock, he said, he joined the other two and they began running. All he remembered of the rest, he said, was that it "felt like a touch of hell."

Weaver had no idea of how many men were on leave, but he believed many escaped the catastrophe because it occurred during the week-end.

GIRL; TWO MEN HURT WHEN AUTO HITS PARKED CAR

Miss Stella Brown, of 647 Peachtree street; J. G. Heise, of Columbia, S. C., and W. A. Deberry, of 647 Peachtree street, were badly shaken up and bruised when an automobile in which they were riding crashed into a parked automobile at West Peachtree and East Linden streets late Saturday night, according to police.

Miss Brown was taken to Grady hospital with several deep lacerations on the head. Deberry and Heise were less seriously hurt.

According to information given Lieutenant W. A. Weaver, of the motorcycle squad, Miss Brown was riding on the front seat of the car with Deberry, when it collided with the parked automobile.

75 BELIEVED DEAD IN BIG EXPLOSION

cluding the wives and families of some of the men stationed at the depot.

Describing the disaster he said: "At 5:25 p. m. I was sitting in my quarters with my wife when the fire alarm sounded. Some one had seen a wisp of smoke coming from a magazine containing T. N. T., depth charges.

"I got into my car and drove toward the magazine. When I was about 200 feet from it there was a terrific explosion, which wrecked my car and threw me out of it.

"There was nothing to do but run before the rain of shells which followed as magazine after magazine blew up."

Captain Dowling made his way to Dover, where he was treated for cuts on the face, and where his wife was confined to a hospital with minor injuries.

DANGER LINES EXTENDED FIVE MILES FROM DEPOT.

The danger lines, beyond which no persons were allowed to pass, were extended late tonight to about five miles from the arsenals. They previously had been maintained at three miles.

This followed reports that fire had spread to the Picatinny arsenal. It is thought here that none of the big concrete magazines at Picatinny had blown up; but only the stores of 16-inch shells at the naval reservation a mile away.

About midnight the explosions at the naval arsenal were not occurring so frequently as earlier in the evening.

List of Injured.

Injured persons taken to the Dover general hospital included:

Casmer Kenligh, 21, a marine, of Hamtramck, Mich.

Samuel Boggs, of Huga, Okla., attached to the depot.

Mrs. Mathilda Koch, 42, of the depot.

Mrs. Burdick, of the navy depot.

Louis Marvin, naval depot, 4110 Shaw avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

Charles Huntler, naval depot.

Charles O. Downing, of the naval depot.

Mrs. H. H. Zornich, living at the Picatinny arsenal.

Mrs. O. Crump, Picatinny arsenal.

SCORES ARE REPORTED KILLED IN EXPLOSION.

(By Leased Wire to The Constitution and The Chicago Tribune.)

Dover, N. J., July 10.—Upwards of 100 persons, mostly United States marines, are dead, scores of service men are injured and fully 200 civilians are under care in homes and hospitals as the result of a series of terrific explosions that tonight wrecked the United States navy ammunition depot at Lake Denmark, N. J., and the army arsenal nearby at Picatinny. Lightning striking a powder magazine caused the catastrophe.

Blast followed blast as other magazines blew up and the fire spread within an hour from the naval depot to the arsenal.

Towns for 30 miles around were rocked and their inhabitants routed from their homes and scores injured. Residents of Dover walked the streets all night fearing destruction of their community, already badly shattered.

New Explosion Expected.

The biggest explosion of all, that of the main magazine at the army ammunition depot, was expected momentarily.

Of the companies of marines stationed at the naval barracks at Lake Denmark only 25 have been accounted for at midnight. It, however, will take well into tmorrow to compute the casualties with any fair degree of accuracy and because of the extreme danger from falling shells it may be days before the bodies of some of the victims can be recovered.

The catastrophe was caused by lightning striking a powder magazine. Blast followed blast as other magazines blew up. The marine barracks near the concrete mansion houses were swept by fire.

All available ambulances within a radius of 25 miles were rushed to the scene and, like so many ambulances from a battlefield in France, rolled back to hospitals and temporary morgues filled with dead and wounded.

Hospitals Filled.

Hospitals in several New Jersey towns were soon filled to overflowing. Extra cots were installed. Still the casualties poured in. Many residents, their own homes shattered by the blasts, opened what remained of their houses to the victims.

The navy ammunition depot is seven miles from Dover. A railroad track separates it from the Picatinny army arsenal.

From the moment the lightning struck one of the magazines, the area was a roaring, seething inferno. Major Young, of the Picatinny arsenal, telephoned for aid and withdrew his men from the army barracks. When fire apparatus arrived from surrounding towns the fire fighters were helpless. They could not safely get their machines within a mile of the scene of disaster.

Sixteen-inch, high explosive shells showered about in an intermittent roar like packets of garguantian firecrackers.

Major Ramsey, U. S. A., was seriously injured by shell fragments as he helped lead his men from the army barracks. His home, a half mile away, was blown to bits.

Practically every building within a three-mile radius was damaged. Scores of civilians were injured in their own homes, some seriously, by flying glass and falling debris.

Woman First Victim.

One of the first of the injured to die in the Dover General hospital was Mrs. Frances Fealey, of 130 West Twenty-ninth street, Brooklyn, N. Y. She was fatally hurt when the ceiling of Major Young's home, where she was visiting, caved in.

The shock of the blast was felt for a radius of 30 miles. A heavy pall of smoke covered a wide area.

Fifty were reported hurt in Rockaway, N. J., eight miles from the depot. An unoccupied automobile on the road a quarter mile from Lake Denmark, was hurled five hundred feet across a field.

Ambulances and fire equipment were delayed in their rush to the depot by thousands of curious motorists drawn to the scene. Their cars clogged the roads for miles in all directions.

Panic-stricken residents fled the mining village of Mount Hope, three miles away, believing there was an earthquake. Screaming women, many cut by glass and debris, fled with their children into the fields as their homes tottered and sagged, or collapsed.

Many of the less seriously injured were obliged to reel to safety on foot, so great was the demand for ambulances. They tottered bleeding and broken along, through the sultry night, under the flame-lightened sky.

Call for Volunteers.

Commander Robert Hoch, of the Dover American Legion, called for volunteers from the legion membership to guard and patrol duty and to assist the injured and homeless to obtain relief.

After the blaze, resulting from the explosions had raged for two hours, the men of the Dover fire department made a heroic attempt to get near the flames. Crouching in their trucks for cover from whistling shells, they worked up to within a half mile of the inferno. More shells burst each moment and fragments whizzed perilously near. Flames roared with renewed vigor and the fire forces were soon forced to retreat in disorder.

A few minutes after the first call for aid went out the telephone service failed and the stricken depot was cut off from the outside world.

Hospitals in the devastated areas at a late hour were too busy caring for injured to attempt to list the names of the scores of victims.

Shortly before 9 o'clock the flames, fed by a new series of shell explosions, shot across the railroad tracks and attacked the great Picatinny arsenal, previously protected from the fire by a west wind.

The arsenal force had been marched away, and the fire made short work of the deserted barracks. Then it lapped at the arsenal itself, causing fresh terrific explosions. Then came a steady roar as the blasts duplicated the havoc wrought in the naval institution. Officers and men stood a mile back and watched helplessly.

Town Is on Fire.

At 9:15 p. m. the entire town of Mount Hope was on fire from shell fire and collapse of houses resulting from the terrific detonations.

Many houses were razed also at Dover, Rockaway and Denville, windows were broken within a radius of 30 miles. It was understood here that every member of one company of marines at the Lake Denmark naval depot were killed.

Calls went out for ambulances and physicians from every section of the state and Red Cross forces from New York city were asked for.

State police, cooperating with military authorities, halted civilian traffic on all roads leading to the scene of the disaster.

Within a large area the citizenry was in a state of terror.

Like refuges fleeing before an invading army, men, women and children began a frantic retreat when the great magazines of the principal eastern army arsenal began to let go, one by one.

Large crowds had crept toward the conflagaration under the shelter of the army buildings, despite efforts of state and army officers to keep them back.

Shriek of Projectiles.

Projectiles shrieked through the air and fragments from the exploding shells thudded into the earth.

Seven marines, on liberty when the explosions started, were formed into a fire detail on their return. A sharp concussion hurled them into a ditch. Cut, bruised, uniforms in tatters, they ran back.

The nearest of all to approach the fire, they said they believed 50 or 60 persons at least perished in the barracks.

Two witnesses of the explosions were Max and Henry Mindlin, of East Orange, N. J.

"We were driving in our automobile through the army reservation," he said. "A thunderstorm seemed right on top of us. We saw a big flash of lightning. Then, before the thunder stopped rolling, there was a terrible explosion. Our car was overturned. We got up badly cut. Another blast rolled us into a ditch. We crawled down to Picatinny on our hands and knees with shells shrieking over us."

Charles Nathan, Jr., of Morristown, went through all the towns surrounding the scene of the tragedy. In Dover he found the city of 14,000 in a panic. Residents feared that if the main naval arsenal blew up it would wreck the whole community.

Town Wiped Out.

The mining village of Mount Hope, according to Nathan, was wiped out, when the shaking earth tumbled the fragile houses into ruins. A Mrs. Findlay and her two small children are among the number known to have been killed there. Terror reigned also in Hibernia and Morristown. Residents were ordered out of Rockaway, a town of 5,000 population.

Timbers and steel from the wrecked depot fell at Butler, 18 miles from the blast.

Lieutenant Commander A. M. Brown, of the naval medical corps, was among the scores killed in the explosion at Lake Denmark.

Headquarters of the third naval district and of the second corps area of the army at Governor's Island were ordered to send details to guard homes and aid in rescue work.

NAVY IS ADVISED OF BIG EXPLOSION.

Washington, July 10.—(AP)—The navy department was advised tonight that the naval ammunition depot at Lake Denmark, Dover, N. J., had been struck by lightning and that approximately two-thirds of the personnel was missing.

The message to the department said that about twenty survivors had been taken to Newfoundland, N. J.

The depot was struck by lightning at 4 p. m.

First official reports did not reach the navy department for several hours and one of the first messages was garbled.

Commander Injured.

A message from Rear Admiral Plunkett, comandant of the third naval district, at New York, said that Captain O. C. Dowling in command at the depot, had been seriously injured.

Admiral Plunkett said the depot had been struck by lightning at 4:30 p. m., and had been completely wiped out. The number of dead and injured was not known, he advised the department, adding that medical aid and a marine guard had been sent to the scene.

At 9 p. m. the navy department was advised that explosions were still occurring at the depot, and that the fire department was unable to cope with the situation.

His advices from the Picatinny arsenal, General C. L. Ruggles, of the war department, said were that the ammunition stores there were in continual danger from the succeeding explosions at the naval depot.

The army arsenal, Ruggles said, contains approximately 10 per cent of the army's stores of ammunition. The 700 workmen employed there, he added, had quit work at noon and most of them had gone to their homes in nearby towns. There were only half a dozen soldiers and a dozen officers stationed on the reservation, along with three superintendents and less than a dozen guards.

Established Four Years Ago.

The army arsenal was established at Picatinny about four years ago and during the world war plants were installed for the loading of projectiles and bombs. The work of this nature now carried on there is mostly experimental.

American Red Cross headquarters announced that it had sent Guy Storey, director of camp activities at Governor's Island, N. Y., to the scene of the disaster to see what the national organization could do to supplement the relief work of local Red Cross units.

Also Miss Alice Brock, field representative, had been ordered to West Morris, N. J., to cooperate with the Red Cross chapter there in relief activities.

Only one death, that of a woman, had been definitely established, although it was believed many had been killed, and it was estimated that at least 20 or 30 persons had been injured.

The navy department experienced difficulty in getting accurate information from the scene of the disaster. It also attempted to get up a list of the personnel at the depot, but up to a late hour tonight had given out only a few names.

They included in addition to Captain Dowling and Lieutenant Commander Brown, of the naval medical corps, who had been reported killed but later listed as a survivor, Captain B. H. Clarke and Lieutenant Herman Schraeder, of the marine corps: Chief Gunners J. M. Gately and W. A. Gerdts, and the following from the naval hospital detachment, stationed at the marine barracks. Charles Franklin Breamer, chief pharmacist mate; Harry Christian Brown, pharmacist mate; Donald Sanborn Prescott, pharmacist mate, second class, and Bernard Joseph Schackman, pharmacist mate, third class.

Home addresses were not available.

Three Officers Missing.

Captain Dowling, in a telephone message late tonight to the navy department from Picatinny arsenal, reported that Lieutenant Commander Brown, Lieutenant Schrader and Captain Clarke were missing. This did not indicate, however, that they had been killed, he said, as it was impossible to check up the personnel.

Dowling said that the naval arsenal was on fire from end to end and had been demolished, and that the Picatinny arsenal also was partly demolished.

Additional advices to General Ruggles from Picatinny arsenal said that fire had broken out there in gun cotton, stored in boxes outside the warehouses there, but that it was not believed explosions would result. While at that time none of the ammunition at Picatinny had exploded, projectiles had been falling from the nearby naval depot, and all persons were keeping clear of the army magazines for fear explosions would occur.

General Ruggles was informed that considerable damage had been done to buildings on the army reservations, some of them having been wrecked. He also was told that no estimate could be made on the loss of life or property damage, as no one could get near the danger zone.

Major General Clarence C. Williams, chief of army ordnance, and Brigadier General Ruggles, assistant chief, prepared to leave tonight for the army arsenal at Picatinny to survey the situation.

Telephonic advices from Major Norman D. Ramsey, commandant of the arsenal, said that several buildings at the arsenal had been badly damaged by projectiles.

Names Are Published.

The navy department made public the following list of enlisted marines who, according to its records, were assigned to duty at the Lake Denmark station:

EXPLOSION COST LIFE IN MAY LAST YEAR.

New York, July 10.—(AP)—An explosion, followed by fire May 28, 1925, at the Picatinny arsenal, near the naval ammunition depot where today's explosion occurred, caused the death of one man. The flames, however, were checked before they reached buildings where explosives were stored.

LAKE DENMARK PLANT WAS NAVY'S LARGEST.

Washington, July 10.—(AP)—The Lake Denmark plant was the navy's largest ammunition storage depot, comprising more than 500 acres of land. During the war it was extended by an addition of 183 new buildings and other extensions of considerable magnitude were made.

The depot was purely a storage plant at which no work of assembling, breaking down, or issuing of ammunition was done.

In describing activities at the depot, the navy department said tonight that ammunition supplies were received there either from the manufacturer or from other depots and were forwarded to other points upon orders by the department.

Check Reveals Sixty Marines At Naval Depot

Washington, July 10.—(AP)—A check-up of the personnel at the navy depot revealed that 59 marines, one captain, four men of the naval hospital unit, including one officer, and 20 to 30 civilians were on duty there.

Considerable high explosives were in storage, part of it of a "death charge" form.

Late tonight the navy department was advised that Lieutenant Commander Brown, previously reported as killed, was alive, although it was not established whether he had been injured.

'Atlanta's Own' Regiment
:: OUTFITS JOIN IN WELCOMING JONES AND GUNN ::
Departs for Tybee Today

Participation of the 122d infantry regiment in the welcoming program at noon today for Bobby Jones and Watts Gunn will precede by about two hours the departure of "Atlanta's Own" regiment for Tybee island where between 1,500 and 1,700 north Georgians will undergo intensive military training for two weeks.

A composite battalion of infantry, with Colonel Charles H. Cox and staff and the regiment's band, will tawe a part in the colorful greeting of the city's two great golfers at noon. This escort will accompany the two stars from the terminal station to the new Athletic club, then will return and board trains for Tybee island and the annual encampment.

Four special trains will take the regiment to the island, leaving this city at 2:30 and arriving in Tybee early Monday morning. Special units have been preparing the camp for several days and everything is in readiness for arrival of the full regiment, according to telegraphic advices Saturday night from officers of the island.

Under the rigid eyes of regular army officers, national guardsmen will begin a few hours after arrival a strenuous program. This program, however, is for certain morning hours and in the afternons and at night members of the regiment will have time to enjoy various features of entertainment at the popular Georgia coast resort. Regimental parades in the afternoons will be the only features to interrupt the "play program" each day.

During last summer's camp hundreds of guests on the island and citizens of Savannah witnessed the daily parades on the beach and with a full year's additional training and preparation the regiment is expected to create even more interest in its activities this summer.

With only a few members of the regiment excused for various reasons and practically all officers ready to entrain, the regiment is carrying its complete strength to camp this year.

President Has Poor Luck
:: RAIN CONTINUES TO MAR VACATION ::
As Fishes Avoid His Hook

Paul Smith's, N. Y., July 10.—(AP) The sport which has gained the increasing attention of President Coolidge since he came to this mountain resort, this week, claimed him again today, the chief executive jumping into a boat and trying his hand at fishing on Lake Osgood before the summer white house.

Although accompanied by Caretaker Otis, of White Pine camp, where the president is spending his vacation, and the experienced guide took him to the best spots on the little sheet of water, no luck rewarded their efforts and Mr. Coolidge returned empty-handed shortly before noon. Not discouraged, he then went to the foot bridge before the camp and practiced at casting.

Rain, which fell at frequent intervals during the day after a continuous downpour last night, made little difference to the president or to Mrs. Coolidge, who, during clear spells walked about the shore of the lake with the white Collies, Rob Roy and Prudence Prim.

Mr. Coolidge also walked under the trees in the morning but in the afternoon he turned his attention to government business and the latest mail from Washington as a heavy thundershower raged outside.

The first trip of any distance from the camp will be made by the president and Mrs. Coolidge tomorrow when they plan to attend morning services at the First Presbyterian church of Saranac Lake, 13 miles away.

At home they attend regularly the Congregational church, but there are none of that denomination in this vicinity. After representatives of the president had made a survey, the church at Saranac Lake was decided upon but without indications of whether it is the intention to make this the president's church home during his entire stay here.

The first visitors of the summer were received at the executive offices today. They included Representative and Mrs. Burgess, of North Dakota, who have been touring New England and are on their way east, and former Representative Francis, of New York city, who was a luncheon guest of Secretary Everett Sanders. No visitors, however, went to White Pine camp and the president remained in seclusion.

Verbal Brick Bats Hurled At Coolidge

Former Head of Chile Says He and Kellogg Lack Intelligence.

Balboa, C. Z., July 10.—Former President Alessandri, of Chile, arrived here this morning from New York and left this evening for Chile. He hurled verbal brickbats at President Coolidge and Secretary of Navy Frank B. Kellogg.

"I cannot understand how a people so great as the Americans could select a man so incapable of fulfilling so important an office as Mr. Kellogg," he said.

"He is altogether lacking in intelligence, and has not the remotest idea what the Tacna-Arica problem is all about. He is incapable of comprehending the principles involved, and the same applies to President Coolidge. I conferred with both Mr. Coolidge and Mr. Kellogg, and found them without the slightest idea of what the Tacna-Arica problem means."

When questioned on his opinion in the Washington negotiations, he said: "Everything is finished now." He declined to amplify his statement. He concluded that Chile always has believed the land hers, and will continue to believe so.

EAST LAKE ELECTION DISPUTE IS SETTLED

Settlement of the controversy over the mayoralty and councilmanic election, held at East Lake almost a year ago, has been reached on an agreement made to drop the proceedings contesting the election, it was announced Saturday by R. W. Crenshaw, mayor of East Lake.

Soon after the election last October H. A. Watson, who opposed Mr. Crenshaw in the mayoralty race, sought an injunction to prevent installation of new officers on the grounds that they were illegally elected. A suit was filed but the case was dismissed. The case was then carried to the superior court which directed a recount of ballots.

Proceedings to test the legality of certain votes and a recount of ballots was begun last Thursday before W. S. Morgan, ordinary. A final agreement was said to have been reached when representatives of both factions were present at a meeting held Saturday.

Curious Names Chosen for Night Clubs in Gotham

New York, July 10.—The genius who formerly stayed up nights devising names for Pullman cars and race horses is devoting his art now to the naming of New York night clubs.

As much is indicated in the list of clubs affected by the latest padlock order of U. S. Attorney Buckner. Their nomenclature, if not so picturesque and imaginative, at least demands attention for their suggestive quality.

New York night club patrons all agree, for example, that the Hyena club could not have been better named if the manager had in mind the sort of laughter that comes with 3 o'clock in the morning and Volstead liquor. One may conjure with the name, "Day Breakers' Club," and its pouring forth or reeling customers into the dawn, or the Scandinavian arms, with its shouts of "Skoal" and its bowls of Swedish punch.

The Spa club represents little more in its name than the current effort to emulate things European, but there is a ring of distinct American originality in the uptown Hoople club, although Mr. Buckner himself is professedly ignorant as to the identity of a Hoople. The Jail club, over on West Third street, may have been better named than the author suspects, while the Clan-a-Gael was designed, presumably, for those who like their whisky with a brogue.

There is something incongruous about the Cathedral Delicatessen, but the Buddy club, with its suggestion of midnight intimacy, is obviously appropriate.

These names are plucked at random only from the 55 places chosen for padlocking, but Buckner is said to have a new list ready even more inspiring in its choice of titles.

Baltimore—Whether historic Fort McHenry's cannon were beaten into plowshares after Admiral Cockburn's fleet was battled to a draw in 1814, nobody seems to know, but investigation has disclosed that only two of the 1812 model muzzle loaders remain. The eastern states are being combed for more to grace reconstructed ramparts.

Washington—Front as well as rear view of the advancing American doughboy soon may be available in the archives of the war department. Negotiations are in progress with Germany, England, France and Italy for a general exchange of official world war moving pictures.

New Agricultural Policy Seen as Greatest Need By Farm Bureau President

Farmers Not Getting Fair Share of National Income, Sam Thompson Tells Tennessee Farmers

Nashville, Tenn., July 10.—(AP)—America's greatest need today is a new agricultural policy, Sam H. Thompson, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, said in an address before the Tennessee

"The United States has no well-defined and recognized national policy for agriculture at the present time," Mr. Thompson said. "It has an economic policy, an industrial policy and a foreign policy, but no agricultural policy in step with the present period.

"It has had such a policy in the past that was satisfactory and workable and in harmony with the requirements of the times, but at present there is no well-determined and continuous policy which is recognized by the national or state governments on the one hand and by the farmers on the other.

"What factors are involved in the development of a national policy for agriculture? Who knows what the policy of the government shall be in its relation to the agricultural industry and to rural life? Who has given, or is able to give the final word as to policies affecting agricultural credit, or land economics, taxation, transportation, marketing, farm tenantry, rural education, local government and cooperation?

Government Action.

"Is it true, as claimed by many leaders of farm organizations, that government action has fundamental relation to farm prosperity; or is it true, as claimed by some eminent authorities, that the farmer must solve his own problems without regard to government action?

"It seems to me to be self-evident that government policies have in the past and will in the future continue to have a profound influence upon the development of a permanent and prosperous agriculture. The radical who proclaims that the farmer's prosperity depends solely upon government action is no more radical than he who maintains that agriculture alone of all industries should not receive aid and encouragement from the government, but should be totally disregarded in the formulation of a general industrial policy."

The farmer is not getting a fair share of the national income, Mr. Thompson continued. The fixed charges of farming are inelastic and inescapable. Taxes, wages, interest and the cost of non-agricultural commodities make a total which has no relation whatever to the price the farmer gets when he hauls his crop to market.

"We have a well-defined policy for other groups. Our financial policy developed through the years with the growth of our banking system and was finally secured through the federal reserve act for financial protection which makes panics almost impossible. A great deal of attention and thought has been given to our labor policy and no one can be blind to the part legislation has played in its development.

"Industry by the very nature of its organization has made cooperation practical—cooperation that amounts nearly, if not quite, to complete understanding, one with another. In this it has been strengthened by government protective measures.

"Our transportation policy has strengthened the position of the railroads in a way somewhat different, but with an effect precisely similar to that employed in the case of the other groups.

"The farmer cannot successfully overcome this tremendous obstacle unless the condition is frankly recognized, and remedy sought in a real agricultural policy for America, which brings the products of the labor of the farmer into fair relationship with that of the labor of other groups."

THOUGHT MALARIA STILL IN SYSTEM

Until Dodson's Liver Tone Drove Out Quarts of Sour Bile and Other Poisons.

There are entire sections where everyone seems to think they have malaria. Others believe they never fully got the malarial poison out of their systems.

Arnold Whiteson says: "For years I took calomel for the aches, biliousness, headache, constipation and the deathly feeling associated with what we believed to be malaria.

"Last year I heard about Dodson's Liver Tone and bought a bottle for a few cents. Man, man, what a God-send. In the morning it drove out quarts of black, sour bile. I got back my appetite for food, braced right up and haven't had a sick spell since. Whenever I feel a little bilious or the stomach gets sour, one dose of Dodson's Liver Tone is all I need. It is surely a blessing."

Hundreds of others tell the same experience.

Take a spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone tonight and you will wake up feeling great. No more biliousness, constipation, sluggishness, headache, coated tongue or sour stomach. Your druggist says if you don't find Dodson's Liver Tone acts better than horrible calomel your money is waiting for you.—(Adv.)

AIR COMPETITION WITH RAILS SEEN

Atlantic City, N. J., July 10.—(AP)—Governor Moore, speaking to the Atlantic states shippers' advisory board at the Ambassador, came to the aid of the railroads of the country by urging as much consideration for them as for any other interest.

"The rails," he said, "have too long been the object of adverse criticism on the part of the public."

Congressional blocs also were attacked by the governor. Cooperation, he said, should play just as important a part in politics as in business.

The need of far sighted vision for railroads was stressed. "If I were a railroad man," he said, "I would immediately see about laying out an airplane landing field near all of my principal stations. The day is not far distant when much of the freight now carried by railroads will be transported by airplane. The railroad man of vision must be able to foresee the great possibility of aerial transportation."

John J. Cornwell, general counsel of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad and former governor of West Virginia, warned the advisory board against over regulation of the railroads by the government.

NoCharity Asked By U.S.Farmers, Says Edgerton

Nashville, Tenn., July 10.—(AP)—Farm problems must be solved by the farmer alone, John M. Edgerton, of Lebanon, Tenn., president of the National Association of Manufacturers, told the Tennessee farm bureau at its annual meeting here tonight.

"The farmer does not want charity," Mr. Edgerton said, "and paternalism is as odious to him as to any other annual meeting here.

"He wants and should have a fair chance with every other group to work out his own economic salvation. All he or any other group should want from the government is protection against injustice, and against the inflow of cheaply produced products from other countries of low wage and low living standards.

"Undoubtedly he should have the same protection that the manufacturer and every other class has."

Mr. Edgerton warned the farmers against efforts to cure economic ills by political treatment and through the application of legislative poultices.

"Too much is expected of government," he said. "America's outstanding curse today is too much politics and not enough work."

Blocs Are Deplored.

Mr. Edgerton deplored the formation of "blocs," but urged organization of farmers to secure "their own rights."

Economic and social problems cannot be separated, he said, asserting that one of the things America needs most "is a restoration of its sense of values."

"People are spending so much for things they want that they have little left to spend for the things that they actually need," he said.

"A notable example of the effect of some of the changes within recent years is the condition today of the textile industry. That industry is now and has been for two or three years greatly depressed, largely because of the fact that almost overnight the women of the world decided to curtail their clothing, almost to the point of abandonment.

"Just about the time we had reached the highest development in textile production the demand for textile products dropped to a point that has threatened the very stability of the industry."

Alleged Forgery Of U.S.Passports Lands 5 in Jail

Warsaw, July 10.—Five passport counterfeiters, with J. Rubinsky, of New York, a naturalized American citizen, as the ring leader, were arrested in Warsaw on information given the police by the American consulate. It is reckoned that on the last seven steamers sailing to America, between 20 and 50 Poles carried forged passports to enter the United States.

They paid $50 to $300 for the forged papers. The reasons for the popularity of forged passports is that 250,000 Poles who are anxious to emigrate to America, applied for passports but could not obtain them because this year's quota provides voyages for only 6,000.

The forgers, Rubinsky, his wife, Joe Grimm and one Greenberg, worked out a system through which they photographed the original passports of Polish citizens and made copies which were given to their customers, who were forced to sail from different ports than the owners of genuine passports in order to avoid detection through the American consuls in the ports.

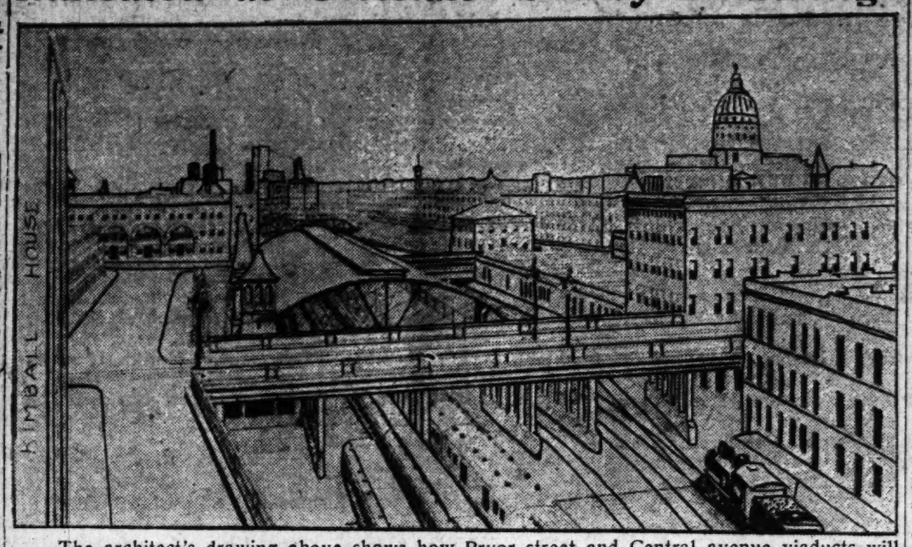

Celluloid Preserves Flowers.

Pressed flowers in botanical collections are too delicate to stand the wear and tear of classroom and museum use, so F. M. Woodruff, curator of the Chicago Academy of Sciences, has invented a process to make them last longer. The whole card on which the flower is mounted is passed through a solution of transparent liquid celluloid, allowed to dry and the whole operation repeated three times to assure a permanent coating.—From a Science Service bulletin.

Early Beginning of Work on Twin Viaducts Indicated as Officials Study Drawings

The architect's drawing above shows how Pryor street and Central avenue viaducts will look when viewed from the Whitehall street viaduct. Walter F. Shulz, of Memphis, architect, sent the above sketch with his detailed plan of the two projects to Atlanta. At the extreme left is the 30-foot passage connecting the Whitehall street viaduct with the Pryor street and Central avenue viaduct, one of the conditions under which the Kimball House Operating company and owners of the Kimball house agreed to withdraw a suit to prevent validation of the bond issue which made possible the twin viaducts.

Council May Be Asked To Supply Necessary Funds To Start Work Pending Sale of Bonds.

With definite plans already made to begin within the next 30 days the triangulation survey of Atlanta and its environs as the first project in expenditure of the $8,000,000 bond issue voted for civic improvements in Atlanta, civic and political leaders Saturday turned attention to the beginning at the earliest possible moment of construction of the twin viaducts which will span Pryor street and Central avenue.

Interest in the viaduct projects was quickened by receipt in Atlanta of completed drawings of the new viaducts. Plans were made by Walter F. Shulz, of Memphis, and copies were received by Mayor Pro Tem. Claude E. Buchanan, who is chairman of the bridge committee of city council; N. C. & St. L. railway engineers and Fulton county officials, representatives of the three groups which will combine in construction of the viaducts.

These drawings will be checked by city, county and railway engineers, and, after reports are made, definite steps to secure funds to begin work at once will be made. Members of the bond commission, headed by William Candler, also will study the drawings.

If viaduct bonds are not sold by the time the city is ready to begin work it is expected that council will be asked to anticipate an adequate amount to start work as it did in the triangulation survey. Mr. Buchanan signed a bill Friday providing a $25,000 fund in order that the survey might be started without further delay.

The school contract committee of the board of education is expected to make its report at the regular meeting of the board Tuesday. Details of recommendations were not available Saturday, but it is reported that they concern only high schools, and that another program for development of elementary schools will be advanced at an early date.

More Shipments Of Grain Planned To Europe Ports

Washington, July 10.—(AP)—Arrangements have been completed for 21 additional sailings to Europe of shipping board vessels this month from Texas ports with a cargo capacity for 4,000,000 bushels of wheat. The surplus grain in the southwestern area is just beginning to move in bulk to tidewater for overseas shipment and seven additional ships have been called into active service to carry grain.

In addition, sailings of cargo vessels from Mobile, Ala., and New Orleans to the United Kingdom and continental ports have been switched for the month to Galveston and Houston with a portion of the space of each ship available for grain and flour cargo.

The traffic department of the emergency fleet corporation has found heavy pressure from grain shippers for sailings in the early part of July and the steps thus far taken are to accommodate these cargoes. An even heavier demand for ships is anticipated during the latter part of the month and additional ships will be brought into active service in time to meet this.

FREE DINNER LURE DRAWS THOUSANDS TO CHICAGO CAFE

(By Leased Wire to The Constitution and The Chicago Tribune.)

Chicago, Ill., July 10.—On the hottest day of the year in Chicago, residents of Hyde Park, a densely populated district, essayed to accept the general invitation of Walter Powers to dine with him, free of cost, wherefore cookstoves throughout the territory were cold and the police had a tremendous job regulating the hungry thousands.

Mr. Powers, who operates a string of restaurants, opened a new one in the Hyde Park district and invited everybody in the neighborhood to dine with him, announcing that for three days everything would be free.

"That will give all of them a chance to try out my chef," he said.

The Hyde Parkers came by scores and by noon all the streets about the new restaurant were jammed. Extra squads of police were summoned to maintain order and the trucks, bearing great quantities of food supplies, found difficulty breaking through the throngs. The police hesitate to estimate the size of the crowds tomorrow and the next day, but they are preparing to handle several thousand.

Iowa Farmers Are Aroused

:: WASHINGTON EXPECTED TO HEAR PROTESTS ::

Over Relief Bill Failure

BY ARTHUR EVANS.
(By Leased Wire to The Constitution and The Chicago Tribune.)

Des Moines, Iowa, July 10.—What Iowa, one of the richest agricultural states in the union, is trying to tell the world, it seems, is that what's sauce for the goose ought to be sauce for the gander, the aforesaid sauce being the idea of protection. Judging from the sentiment uncovered in the cross-section from Davenport to Des Moines, the roar against failure of farm relief will rise to such a pitch this summer and fall that Washington and the folks back east won't need ear phones to listen in. One feature of the agrarian agitation is that a substantial part of the more prosperous farmers seem quite as incensed as are those hardest hit by cheap corn. Among hog-raisers who are riding easy with pigs at $14, one hears protests as loud as among those whose corn brought 50 cents a bushel or less and who had no swine to manufacture it into high-priced hams and bacons.

(1.) The basic problem is the land more than anything else; the decline in capital values, the dull market for acres. In fact, the Genesis of the corn belt movement last winter as pointed out at the time, was an urgent desire to get land prices into better position by devices that would bring fair and stabilized prices for farm products which determine the worth of agricultural land.

(2.) Urbanization—Iowa has not kept pace with other states in industrial development. Many stress the need of increasing manufacturers in the state.

(3.) The tariff—democratic hopes on this may flivver for the prevailing sentiment so far canvassed is this: The farmer is for high wages in the cities; he wants everybody prosperous and the last thing in his mind, apparently, is to destroy the purchasing power of his democratic market by overthrowing tariff protection. But he doesn't want to be left out of the picture. Anti-tariff is held up as an alternative to farm relief. In times past Iowa has been quite outspoken on the tariff. Twenty years or so ago, the celebrated "Iowa idea" was heralded by Cummins. Later on, when President Taft unbelted the Winona speech on downward revision upward—which put him on the toboggan—the first reply came a few days later from Iowa, from the late Senator Dolliver, but with all the shouting of those days, Iowa never for a minute was for democratic free trade. Still, the democrats today have hopes in a plea for a revision of the schedules on articles which the farmer buys.

As one of the wisest, cagiest, old timers in the state put it today, "the funniest gag is this line from the east, 'let's educate the farmer!' Why, the Iowa farmer is the wisest bird there is. We're the lowest state in illiteracy and Cambridge, Mass., the home of Harvard, is three times more illiterate than Iowa, the census shows. What Iowa rises to inquire is this: Why should the farmer buy all his goods under high tariff but have to sell all his stuff free trade?"

Iowa today is ruralized to an extent unknown in states east of the Mississippi. It is one of the greatest productive areas in the world; it produces goods worth about a billion and a half dollars a year. It is first in corn and oats, first in pigs, poultry and horses, and first in the value of all farm property. It is second in the value of all farm crops, second in cattle, third in hay, and fifth in vegetables.

It has a population of 2,505,000, of which 1,600,000 is rural. In 86 counties, rural population predominates; in 14 counties, urban, about 64 per cent of the people live in the rural regions.

Iowa Is Ruralized.

Iowa today is as ruralized as were Michigan and Wisconsin around 1890 and as was Indiana in 1900, before the Gary industrial region was established. It has only one town of over 100,000 and that is Des Moines with about 150,000. In 1920 it had only three cities of between 50,000 and 100,000; three cities between 25,000 and 30,000, and 11 between 10,000 and 25,000. Its industries are growing, each year seeing more come in, but the plaint of Iowa is that too much of its manpower is being drained by the outside.

Its largest industrial communities are along the Mississippi and Missouri rivers, and in the Des Moines and Cedar River valleys. They have a diversion manufacturing and the value of manufactured products is climbing. In 1920, the factory output was valued at $745,000,000, against $890,000,000 for farm crops. This growth, although steady, is far behind the pace set by industries in agricultural states east of the river. It is interesting to note that back in 1870, the ratio of manufactured products to farm crops in dollars, was approximately what it was in 1920. Efforts are being made to stimulate industrial growth—there will be further discussion of this—and cities are pointing out the state has great advantages such as plenty of railroad trunk lines, a good labor supply, and an abundance of certain raw materials and of coal and electrical energy.

FRANCE PUSHING RECONSTRUCTION

Washington, July 10—(AP)—France's war reconstruction program, which has required the expenditure of 79,000,000,000 francs, was far advanced with little proposed restoration work remaining to be done this year, the commerce department has been advised by Trade Commissioner Green at Paris.

Some of the accomplishments of the French toward restoring damaged property were outlined in the report. A total of 53,165 kilometers of highways have been repaired out of a total of 58,697 damaged, while 2,361 kilometers of railway lines of local interests have been restored to operation out of a total of 2,408 destroyed.

Of 17,616 public buildings destroyed or damaged, 11,343 have been rebuilt; 2,856 public buildings have been provisionally repaired, and of 8,344 projects of various sorts connected with highways, railroads and water courses, 6,749 have been restored.

Out of a total of 1,923,479 hectares of land requiring restoration, 1,815,449 had again been placed under cultivation; of 866,844 fixed properties destroyed or damaged 521,913 have been rebuilt or repaired, of which 364,406 were residences or business quarters; 42,400 temporary homes have been erected with materials left over from the war, and 108,901 temporary wooden homes which were built during or since the war were still serving as residences.

Fifty-Seven Varieties of Kisses Are Described By Scholar

:: OSCULATION FORBIDDEN BY TRIBE ::

BY MAURICE MERMEY.

New York, July 10.—Although his work is compiling dictionaries, Dr. Frank H. Vizetelly, the eminent lexicographer, has written, by request of a young lady who rebels at promiscuous osculation, a disquisition on the kiss in which he describes, classifies and names the 57 varieties of the labial smack.

"In Holy Writ, the kiss is classified," said the lexicographer. "The first kiss of Bible record is that of affection, and was given to Isaac by Esau. The others are kisses of adoration, love, brotherhood, friendship, salutation, homage and obedience, lowliness and solicitude, subjection, reconciliation, treachery, farewell and death."

That seems to cover the field fairly well, but Dr. Vizetelly, with his profound knowledge of words, went further. "Among the ancient Hebrews kissing the beard was a sign of great homage. In the pagan world those who failed to throw kisses to the statues of the gods on their feast days, or to the sun and moon, were considered unbelievers.

"Under the rulers of the Roman empire, kissing the hand was a mark of respect and subjection jealously guarded. Under Diocletian, the correct form of salutation, showing subjection to an emperor, was to kiss the feet of the sovereign, a practice that ultimately led to the kissing of the ground over which the august Caesars passed. In Roman families kissing before marriage was not customary, nor is it so in the polite society of France today."

After outlining the very early history of osculation, Dr. Vizetelly qquoted Winsemius, historiographer of the states of Friesland, saying that kissing was not known in Britain until Berenicere Rowena, beautiful daughter of Hengist of Friesland, "pressed the beaker to her lipkens, and saluted the amorous Vortigern with a kusjen."

The ill-fated Marie Stuart had her own idea on the matter of kissing, according to Dr. Vizetelly. "I kiss not the man; I kiss the soul that sings," she said when caught by her ladies-in-waiting bending over the sleeping Alain Chartiet, a French poet.

Getting back to the female correspondent who objected to public kissing, Dr. Vizetelly advised her to take up her residence somewhere with a South American tribe, where, an explorer said, kissing is absolutely banned.

Sports Clothes.

(Woman Citizen.)

A successful sports dress, never looks trimmed. Plain fabrics are used mostly, but combinations of plain and striped or plain and checked are also smart. The favorite tailleur in France just now has a jacket of one color and skirt of a different shade or fine stripe. The best accessories for sports—if any—are a leather belt and scarf. Beads are sometimes added by well-dressed women, but the meticulous type would leave off the beads unless she needed them to change an unbecoming neck line.

JAPANESE SEEK TO BAN SLAVERY

Tokyo, Japan, July 10.—The weird twang of the samisen, Japan's native musical instrument, coming from behind thinly barred windows of the Yoshiwara, "nightless city" of Tokyo, may be heard no more by adventuresome youths of the capital if the present reform wave sweeping over the ministry of home affairs is successful.

Gradual abolition of licensed prostitution has been approved as a policy by the ministry of home affairs, and while the home minister is said to feel that first steps toward reform should include the improvement of conditions in the houses, the ultimate object will be the abolition of the system which permits the selling of Japanese girls into slavery.

Tokyo, Kobe, Nagasaki—all of the leading cities of Japan have their Yoshiwaras, where the young bloods of the town mingle with the older men and occasionally meet a venturesome foreigner bent on seeing the far-famed "nightless city."

Imagine a whole section of the city, gay with lanterns, charming with its balconies suggestive of Cairo, its modern buildings built to stand forever, and the entire section given over to houses of the underworld. "Cherry blossom time" in the main Yoshiwara of Tokyo, near the famous Asabusa Kwannon temple, was a gala season in the days of the old Yoshiwara. Then the leading women of the nightless city held parades and were attended by their maids in waiting, young girls who had been sold into a life of slavery. And while the pink toed blossoms sheltered them, these women postured and smiled, and wore their varicolored kimonos in a manner charming to the westerner who now and then was able to view the procession.

First the placing of women in cages, that future patrons might view them, was barred by the Japanese law. Then the American missionaries and the western influence in Japan worked against legalized prostitution. It was whispered that some of the great fortunes of Japan had their inception in these picturesque districts. Anyway, the hopes of the reformers met with opposition.

Now the home ministry and the press have taken up the battle to end Japan's nightless cities for all time.

"The emancipation of prostitutes may sound rather extraordinary," says an editorial in the newspaper Chugai Shogyo Shimpo of Tokyo. "But this must be our objective."

BRIGAND ATTACK ON WAGON TRAIN CAUSES 28 DEATHS

Rome, July 10.—(AP)—Twenty-two soldiers, five civilians and one native were killed by Cyrenaican brigands in a surprise attack on a wagon train proceeding from Apollonia to Cyrene, the colonial office announces.

The train, consisting of four camions of civilians and one camion of soldiers, with a military escort, was going to Cyrene as part of a concentration of forces in an effort to break up the wholesale brigandage in the region between Tarich Aziza and the sea.

Reinforcements, arriving after the attack, dispersed the brigands and captured a number of chiefs. Severe penalties are being inflicted upon those responsible.

American Given Term in Prison In Chinese Swindle

Seattle, Wash., July 10.—(AP)—For a swindle they perpetrated on a northern China military chief, James J. Underwood, 30, an aviator, and E. A. Miller, 29, are in Seattle today awaiting removal to McNeil Island penitentiary, the former to serve 30 months and the latter 18. They were brought here last night on the steamship President McKinley.

Using an army rifle owned by Miller as a sample, the two arranged with the Chinese leader to sell him 1,500 rifles and several thousand rounds of ammunition. Agents of the Chinese paid the pair $14,500 with delivery to be made last April.

American authorities arrested Miller and Underwood on a train bound for Tientsin. Underwood's wife, whom he married in China, was convicted and placed on probation for a year. The cases were tried in the United States court in China.

Wrightsville, Ga., July 10.—(Special.)—A revival meeting which has been in progress at Union Hill Baptist church near here for several days closed Friday morning with a service at the Brown Memorial Baptist church here. He is a very popular preacher in this section and is always heard by large crowds.

A census revealed ten persons in the community were not members of a church. Eight of them came into the church in this meeting.

Three Are Shot By College Youth To Obtain Money

Indianapolis, Ind., July 10.—(AP)—An 18-year-old college student engaged in automobile thievery which led to a spectacular shooting affray.

John Buchanan, 25, negro traffic officer, was killed; Carl Schaffer, a bystander, was wounded seriously and Frank Whitlow was injured by Gene Alger, Butler college student, before he was wounded by a traffic officer while attempting to escape in an automobile which he commandeered.

Alger was caught by Alvin C. Fad while attempting to steal Fad's car. Fad turned him over to two negro traffic officers. Suddenly Alger pulled a pistol, fired at the officers and sped into a hotel.

"Hide me quick; they will get me." Alger panted, waving his gun in front of the proprietor, who secreted Alger in a closet. Buchanan entered the hotel and was directed to the closet. He fired through the door. A return shot mortally wounded the officer. Firing promiscuously, Alger leaped through a window and ran down an alley. Schaffer was struck by one of these wild bullets. In his flight Alger encountered Whitlow, whom he clubbed over the head.

A block from the hotel Alger jumped into a machine, commanding its woman driver to help him escape. Before the automobile could start officers drove up and one shot the youth in the back.

Alger tonight said he attempted the theft to get money to return to college next fall. He completed his freshman year this spring.

ORGANIZED DRIVE ON COTTON PESTS URGED BY COLLEGE

Little Rock, July 10.—(AP)—Necessity for a state-wide organized drive against cotton pests loomed tonight with admission by J. C. Barnett, acting assistant director of the agricultural extension department of the University of Arkansas, that the situation from the standpoint of crop damage is the worst in the history of the state.

Recent reports from scattered counties show presence of one or more types of insects and damage estimated at from 10 to 70 per cent of the crops he said. Barnett confirmed by a personal tour of Faulkner and Pulaski counties today reports of the tarnish bug, cotton hopper and army worm. County Agent J. W. Sargent, of Pulaski county, said damage might run as high as 75 per cent.

Agents in Grant, Ark., and Ouachita counties have reported the pests and Associate Entomologist Dwight Isely, of the state university, found them in Dessa and Jefferson counties. Cotton hopper infestation may be on the wane, he told Barnett.

RECEIVER ASKED FOR AMERICAN BANK IN COLUMBIA, S. C.

Columbia, S. C., July 10.—(AP)—Charges of mismanagement in the affairs of the American Bank and Trust company, which "the state bank examiner should have known" were made by D. W. Robinson, of counsel for the city of Columbia, in a hearing before Judge W. H. Townsend here today on a petition of John I. Rice and other depositors, for an injunction to prohibit the city of Columbia, Richland county, John L. Mimnaugh and other large depositors, who hold specially assigned securities in protection of deposits from disposing of their holdings.

The injunction was granted. At the same time the city of Columbia asked that a disinterested party or parties be named as receiver, and that the affairs of the bank be taken from the hands of Bank Examiner Bradley. A hearing on the rule to show cause why this should not be done was set for next Saturday in Columbia.

In its petition for receiver, the city of Columbia charged that Mr. Bradley is a large debtor to the bank; that the bank gave to the city a note signed by Mrs. Bradley, wife of the examiner for $5,000 in payment for stock in the bank, the note showing notation where payments had been made on it from dividend checks paid by the bank; that I. M. Mauldin, president of the bank is president also of the Southern Motor company, of Columbia, and the bank gave the city and Richland county as securities on its deposits notes of this motor company, totaling $74,000.

SUMTER FARMERS PLAN TO FIGHT FLEA AND WEEVILS

Americus, Ga., July 10.—(Special.) The Sumter county agricultural board has been called to meet in Americus Monday to devise plans for combating the cotton hopper or Texas cotton flea in Sumter county cotton fields. Boll weevil control will also be discussed by the board members, and recommendations regarding this problem will also be made by the board.

H. A. Cliett, county agent, recently conducted a farm survey here, which reveals distressing conditions in many communities. According to Cliett, who issued the call for the county board to meet, cotton plants here are only lightly fruited, although in size and color they are all that could be desired.

Daily showers in different sections have created conditions favorable to boll weevil propagation, and Cliett declares farmers must "get on the job and stay there," if they expect to harvest a satisfactory cotton yield this fall. Fifteen representative farmers living in various sections of the county, constitute the agricultural board, and Texas cotton flea cotton control is the first major farming problem to be undertaken since the board was organized several months ago upon recommendation of the grand jury of Sumter superior court.

MOVIE SHAKESPEARE FORECAST BY LASKY

Hollywood, Cal., July 10.—(AP)—The screen is ready for its Shakespeare and the film will have its "Bard of Hollywood" as surely as the stage produced its Bard of Avon.

This is the pronouncement of Jesse L. Lasky, motion picture producer. And while he does not forecast the arrival of the super-scenarist this year or next, he declares the great need of motion pictures eventually will bring its answer—a screen Shakespeare.

"A man will come who will tower above past writers and contemporaries in the construction of original screen stories," Lasky said. "He will bring to the screen something new, some great thought, some finely wrought form of consruction and story telling. He will open our eyes to new possibilities, to new dreams of the screen as a medium of art, and when he passes will leave a creative monument behind him that many generations will gaze upon.

Arrival Not Far Away.

"There is a tremendous need and I, for one, am sure that the super-author of pictures will rise in the not too distant future.

"The screen started from nothing 30 years ago and today has developed a marvelous medium of pictorial story telling. It is an artistic medium that has grown faster in its technical possibilities than it has in its literary and dramatic power.

"We have some trained writers who think in terms of the screen, who dream their dreams in terms of picture art. We have trained technical workers, but most of them have come to us from the world of letters or from the short-story or newspaper field. We need these workers, but we also need men and women who are thinking in terms of Olympus.

Will Use Old Material.

"We need someone who will bring to the screen what Shakespeare brought to the drama of his time. He galvanized dramatic construction and gave it form. He pulled the drama out of its rut of tradition and its heritage of being a religious spectacle.

"We do not expect someone to come along with startling new plots, novel situations, or brilliant photographic effects. Shakespeare, as a matter of fact, worked with age-old material. Many of his plots were time-worn, and had been used by many other writers in many countries. But it was what Shakespeare saw in them and what he saw in the stage as a medium of expression that made him great."

BLIND NEWSBOY TO SERVE 5 YEARS IN WOMAN'S DEATH

Tampa, Fla., July 10.—(AP)—"Blind Charlie" Manuel, 30-year-old newsboy, was in jail here today awaiting transfer to Raiford prison to serve a sentence of five years' imprisonment for killing Mrs. Emma Hilliar, 35, several months ago.

Manuel pleaded guilty to a charge of manslaughter in circuit court yesterday. He declared he did not remember the actual killing but told of finding that Mrs. Hilliard had taken some money from his pocketbook and of becoming enraged when she denied it.

Court attaches said the plea of Judge C. B. Parksill, state attorney, was more favorable to Manuel than of defense counsel.

RAIN AIDS CROPS IN OXFORD SECTION

Oxford, Ga., July 10.—(Special.)—Cotton is late in this section, and almost devoid of squares. The crop has been damaged by the dry weather and the Texas flea. In the past two days there has been rain, but not enough to wet the clay. Many gardens have been practically burned up. Grain crops, wheat and oats have been fine. Irish potato crops are largely a failure.

Farmers have been discouraged, but with recent rain hope has been revived. The land has been well cultivated, and up to date there has been no grass and no boll weevils, and it is hoped that the rains have destroyed the fleas.

FIRE DAMAGES LUMBER PLANT IN MACON

Macon, Ga., July 10.—(AP)—The dry kilns of the Case-Fowler Lumber company here were destroyed early today by a fire that threatened to consume the entire plant and large quantities of lumber in the yards. The damage was held at $8,500 by the company officials.

Although the plant is outside the city limits, city firemen responded to the alarm and successfully battled the flames.

The kilns, five in number, were all full of drying lumber at the time, which ran up the amount of damage.

The company opened for business this morning and will continue operations without interruption according to officials. The kilns are to be replaced at once.

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 89

A Child's Laxative which Mothers Can Rely On

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated infants and children had to be kept "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all children's little ills, he constantly advised mothers to give only a harmless laxative which would help to establish natural bowel "regularity."

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin mothers have a regulating laxative which they can depend upon whenever a child is constipated, bilious, feverish or sick from a cold, indigestion, or sour stomach. All children love its pleasant taste.

Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine and just see for yourself how perfectly it cleanses and regulates the bowels of infants and children.

WOOD CONTINUES TO FLAY HOLDER

Continuing his attack on what he terms "ring-rule in politics" and the practice of "bootlegging mileage" in the state highway department, J. C. Wood, of Atlanta, has closed another active week in his campaign for governor.

Demand that John Holder, head of the highway department and candidate for governor, publicly allocate the 800 miles of road work which he claims to intend letting, and the charge that Holder has secretly promised approximately 5,000 miles to various counties as a "political overture" a proposal to undertake the abolishment of more than 340 oil, fertilizer and bee inspectors as a step towards the end of "ring rule," and an outline of constructive measures of state-wide importance which he will undertake were highlights of addresses he delivered in several Georgia towns, including LaGrange, Fitzgerald and Oglethorpe.

"In fairness to the people, I call on Mr. Holder to make public before election the counties which are to actually receive additional mileage, together with the number of miles they are to receive," Mr. Wood said. "I am told by those receiving these promises that he has not made them openly, but has whispered to them, and also that he has not intimated when they may expect to know the allocation of the mileage promised in secret conference.

Meetings Are Held.

"He has held meetings in his office to which were invited voters of all sections of Georgia who were interested in mileage in their counties. They came, had conferences, but no public announcement has been made as to the allocation.

"I insist that legally Mr. Holder has not even the 800 miles to let which he claims to have, but granting that he has, it is estimated that behind closed doors he has promised more than 5,000 miles."

Mr. Wood declared that through this "bootlegging of mileage" Mr. Holder is holding a "big stick" over voters of several counties.

He made it plain that in his race he will not have the support of any political machine or set of men whose personal interests will lead them to advocate his candidacy.

"Indeed, it is because of the machine-rule in Georgia that I am entering this contest with the firm intention of doing everything within my power to smash organizations whose political influences have been so costly to the state," he said.

"At present more than $500,000 is spent annually by the agricultural department to maintain its present system of oil and fertilizer inspection.

"I plead guilty to this indictment. I am proud that even my enemies will concede that I am an average person. If I am elected I will try to serve you in my capacity of an average person, for frankly, we have tried the other kind until it has hurt. This government was founded by average persons, its laws were framed by average persons, and its institutions were ordained by average persons."

Mr. Wood admits he is a member of the Ku Klux Klan, but denies he is a Klan candidate.

"The only other argument advanced against me is that I am a klansman. I am a member of the Baptist church but no one has the temerity to say that I am the candidate of the Baptist church. I hold membership in many organizations, fraternal and civic, but no one has advanced that as a reason for my unfitness to serve the people as governor. I belong to these organizations, I believe in their principles, and believeing in them, I endeavor in my humble way to be a good member.

"There has been an attempt to inject the matter of issuing bonds into this campaign as the paramount issue. In my opinion the question of a bond issue is not one for a candidate for governor to assume. . . . The person who comes before you as a candidate for governor and says that if he is elected there shall be no bond issue, is promising to violate his oath to the constitution which says plainly that the legislative, judicial and executive branches of the government must forever remain separate, and that neither shall encroach upon the other. The same is true of the person who tells you that if elected he will see that you shall have bonds. This is purely a legislative matter. I am not trying to dodge the issue by this statement. My record in the legislature is clear on bonds.

"I charge that Mr. Holder is not sincere in his stand on the bond question. He advocated a bond issue of $75,000,000 before the Georgia State Automobile association, and so far as I know he held to that view until he learned that Governor Walker would recommend the creation by the legislature of a bond commission to handle proceeds from the sale of bonds. It may be a mere coincidence that he changed at about that time, then again it may not.

"Mr. Carswell, according to his published speeches, is either for or against bonds, according to what it takes to elect George governor."

Mr. Wood expressed himself in favor of the creation of a highway board of 12 men, one from each congressional district, who in turn would elect a commissioner of roads who would not be a member.

J. M. HARRISON IS NOT OWNER OF APARTMENT

J. M. Harrison, of J. M. Harrison and company, used car dealer, of 125-131 Ivy street, in a letter to The Constitution, Saturday, asked that this paper state that he is not the owner of an apartment house on Williams street, which impression arose through similarity of names in an item printed in local newspapers, it was explained.

Mr. Harrison, the automobile dealer, wants it understood that he is in no way connected with the apartment house mentioned above.

Liquor Car Captured In Exciting Chase Through Druid Hills

After an exciting chase through the fashionable residential section of Druid Hills Saturday, a car laden with 90 gallons of corn whisky was captured by County Policemen L. W. Allen and William Dinson. The driver of the machine escaped by running when officers approached.

A "tip" that a cargo of whisky would pass through that section was given police who found two liquor cars, with a scout car ahead. After passing the scout car, the second automobile was captured, when Policeman Dinson leaped to the running board of the machine. The second automobile escaped, although Allen gave chase.

The Sessions Loan & Trust Company was founded less than a quarter of a century following the close of the civil war and the activities of this company have been constructive forces in rehabilitating and building up the South.

With the ideals and traditions of the old South as a basis, it has continued this work of reconstruction and today it stands in the forefront of progress representing one of the most efficient, reliable, and sound financial institutions.

The rapid expansion of the business interests of the company, which has taken place in the past ten years, has necessitated a like expansion in personal and physical equipment. After surveying the Southern states and weighing carefully the possibilities of the leading cities of the South, the officers and executives of the Sessions Loan & Trust Company were unanimous in selecting Atlanta as the South's greatest industrial and financial business center, and are glad to announce to the public that from now on, the interests of the Sessions Loan & Trust Company and the interests of Atlanta are identical.

As an assurance and pledge of our sincerity in announcing that the interests of this company and Atlanta are identical, several prominent Atlantans will be invited to become members of our board of directors. These citizens of Atlanta whose homes and fortunes are a part of its civic life will assist the Sessions Loan & Trust Company in shaping its future policy with the objective of not only developing the resources of this institution, but of making it one of the most constructive elements in a greater Atlanta.

Many of the best families from Vermont to Florida have made investments recommended by and purchased through this old and well-known Southern institution.

The Sessions Loan & Trust Company has been one of Georgia's own, and Georgia's best investment houses. The Company is one of the pioneers in its field, and has assisted hundreds and thousands of Georgians to acquire and maintain farms and homes, and through its Income Bond Plan, to build up cash estates.

SESSIONS LOAN & TRUST COMPANY SERVICE

In establishing its new home office in Atlanta, the Sessions Loan & Trust Company has incorporated in its service every convenience and every utility offered to the patrons of any similar institution in the South.

It is an outstanding example of a thoroughly modern financial institution and typifies all that progress has done in this field of human activities.

MOULTRIE M. SESSIONS

Founder of Sessions Loan & Trust Company and Chairman of the Board of Directors

The Founder of the Sessions Loan & Trust Company needs no introduction to those familiar with the financial interests of the state. He has been an outstanding figure in the industrial and economical progress of Georgia since 1887. Mr. Sessions was one of the charter members of the Farm Mortgage Bankers' Association and served four years on the Board of Governors. His wide and mature experience in financial matters is always at the disposal of patrons of this company and his counsel constitutes a stabilizing and strengthening influence in all of the company's activities.

R. H. ALDERMAN

President Sessions Loan & Trust Company

Mr. R. H. Alderman, who has been elected President of the Sessions Loan & Trust Company (Mr. Alderman was for eleven years President of Southern College, Lakeland, Fla., and was largely responsible for the growth and development of this institution. He is also immediate past president of the Lakeland Rotary Club), brings to this position of trust and responsibility a fund of mature and even knowledge that constitutes a further safeguard to the interests of the patrons of this company. Mr. Alderman's entire time will be devoted to the interest of the Sessions Loan & Trust Company and his wide acquaintance throughout the South affords a personal contact that will be regarded as a valuable addition to the resources of the company.

MORTGAGE LOAN DEPARTMENT

Mr. A. D. Sessions, who personally supervises the work of this department, is efficient and experienced in this field. Through this department may be negotiated loans of all classes on city and rural property, and the facilities offered are complete, including every modern convenience which goes to make up a prompt and efficient loan service.

REAL ESTATE DEPARTMENT

The Real Estate Department is one of the indications of the progressive policies of this institution. Simultaneously with our move to Atlanta, this department was established with a view of expanding and perfecting our general service to our clients. In charge of this department is Mr. Albert Hatch, who became associated with the organization on the opening of its real estate department.

Sales, rentals, leases and all other phases of real estate activities come within the scope of our real estate department.

BOND DEPARTMENT

This is one of the important departments of the Sessions Loan & Trust Company. The reputation and standing of this company has been largely founded upon the success of this branch of the business. For years our bond department has been found unvaryingly reliable in its judgment and counsel to investors.

The Secretary and Treasurer of the company, Mr. Ralph B. Goodson, supervises the operation of this department. Mr. Goodson is a conservative man and of keen judgment in all matters of finance. The bond sales are directly in charge of Mr. Edward N. Claughton, who is sales manager.

Mr. Claughton is one of the best known of the younger generation of Atlanta business men, and has already proven himself to be a man of astute judgment and business integrity. Mr. Parks Johnson is District Manager for the state of Georgia.

The bonds offered for sale by this department enjoy the distinction of being in a class by themselves. This distinction is due to the fact that all deposits and mortgages of our patrons are held as a trust fund by an institution directly under the supervision of the Georgia State Securities Commission. In addition to this, the unique payment plan on which these bonds are sold has been instrumental in laying the foundation for thousands of substantial incomes.

The Sessions Loan & Trust Company will gladly furnish complete data and descriptive matter relative to these bonds in response to all inquiries.

NEGRO SLAYER SAVED FROM DEATH IN CHAIR

Governor Clifford Walker late Saturday stepped between Rufus "Mule" Hicks, and the electric chair, and in an executive order commuted his sentence of execution to life imprisonment. The Muscogee county negro was sentenced to die July 13 for the slaying of a prison guard in an attempt to escape.

In his executive order Governor Walker declared that since the chief justice of the supreme court dissented from the judgment affirming the conviction of Hicks, although technically the evidence was sufficient to "justify the verdict," that the record "leaves a very grave doubt that this applicant actually killed the deceased."

The chief executive further says that Hicks was "an innocent negro boy only 19 years old when given an inhuman sentence of 20 years for larceny," and that "he had never known the real meaning of freedom."

At the time of the killing Hicks was serving a 20-year sentence for stealing a horse and killed the prison guard in his attempt to escape prison.

Atlanta Escapes Heat Wave Fatal To 20 in North

While a suffocating heat wave in the middle west and east was snuffing out 19 lives, Atlanta escaped unscathed and today is scheduled to be even cooler.

Thundershowers late Saturday cooled the air considerably, although, according to A. H. Scott, Atlanta's official weatherman, the mercury has not risen to any unheard of heights here recently.

Dispatches from all parts of the middle west and east indicate that the heat wave there has been the most disastrous of the year. Five persons dead and eight prostrations was the toll reported in New York. Chicago had 12 persons dead and a large number of prostrations. Two lives were lost in Detroit and a cyclone near Niles, Mich. claimed four lives.

The mercury took a nose dive late Saturday afternoon after the heavy downpour of rain and will not rise to any great heights today, Mr. Scott announced. It did not rise above 92 degrees during the day. Minimum temperature was 69 degrees. The rain late Saturday will be the last for a day or two Mr. Scott said, and fair weather is seen for today.

After reaching the high mark of 92 degrees at 3 o'clock Saturday afternoon, the thermometer dropped to 73 degrees. The lowest mark set during the day was 69 degrees, which was registered early in the day.

Within the space of two and a half hours Saturday afternoon .35 of an inch of rain fell.

Sixth Ward Citizens Oppose Condemnation Of Many Sidewalks

When the streets committee of city council meets Friday a large delegation of sixth ward citizens will oppose what is termed "wholesale condemnation" of sidewalks in that ward and will ask that body to rescind its action in declaring unfit for further use sidewalks on Alexander, Mills, Hayden, Luckie, Plum, Orme, Baker, Hunnicutt, Pine, Merritts, Williams, Cain, Simpson, Venable, Hull, McAfee, North avenue and Techwood drive.

The main contention will be that new street grades will be made when widening projects contemplated on Luckie, Courtland and Orme streets are completed, Councilman Harry York, of the sixth, declared Saturday in announcing his intention of leading the fight against the condemnation. Councilman Harry Roberts, also of the sixth, and a member of the streets committee, will oppose the action of the committee.

News of the death of Mrs. C. A. Van Raden, in Armhem, Holland, was received in Atlanta late Friday by Miss Jacueline van Raden, of 523 Church street, Decatur, a daughter. Mrs. Van Raden was 84 years old and was well known in Atlanta and Decatur.

"We are going to make the Sessions Loan & Trust company an institution that will render a real service to the southern farmer and at the same time we won't forget the city folks," declared R. H. Alderman, recently of Lakeland, Fla., who came to Atlanta to assume the presidency of the trust company with a capital stock of $500,000.

The concern specializes in mortgage banking and maintains city and farm loan bond, real estate departments. Two weeks ago the company purchased outright the realty, rentals and lease departments of Wynne-Claughton, Inc., well-known Atlanta corporation operating many large apartments, including St. Andrews apartment on West Peachtree street, the Wynne-Claughton building and other properties.

Mr. Alderman for 11 years was president of Southern college, Lakeland, Fla., and under his leadership the enrollment was doubled and properties of the school more than trebled. It is now one of the leading educational institutions in the state. In 1925 he entered the realty and mortgage business.

Emory Graduate.

In 1904 Mr. Alderman was graduated from Emory university and received other degrees at the universities of Columbia and Denver. He has been a close student of economics as well as finance and politics. His financial experience was gained in his direction of the Florida college.

The mortgage banking department, which includes farm and city loans, will be directed by A. D. Sessions, who has been prominent in the farm loan business for years. His father, M. M. Sessions, was one of the organizers of the body which was destined to become the Mortgage Bankers' Association of America, which boasts a membership of financiers in practically every state in the nation. At first the association ineluded only farm loan bankers, but later the name was changed so that city bankers were included.

The bond department will be managed by Ralph B. Goodson and E. M. Claughton will have charge of the sales force. Small amounts of cash can be deposited with the firm systematically each month and its earning power utilized, the officials state.

Directorate.

The real estate department will be directed by A. S. Hateh, who for years has been conversant with property values and who is widely experienced in his line.

Mr. Alderman is officially connected with the Polk Bond & Mortgage company, of Lakeland, Fla., and the Collateral Bond & Mortgage company, of St. Petersburg, Fla., as well as other financial organizations.

Directors of the company are: Former Governor Joseph M. Brown, of Marietta; John Blue, president of the Illinois Standard Trust company, Decatur, Ill.; Herbert J. Drane, member of congress and president of H. J. Drane & Son, Lakeland, Fla.; Ralph B. Goodson, secretary of the local company; N. A. Morris, prominent attorney; Guy H. Northcutt, vice president of the Marietta Knitting company; L. N. Pipkin, president of the Bank of Mulberry, Mulberry, Fla.; A. D., Lee M. and Moultrie M. Sessions and George L. Williams, president of the Bank of Candler county, Metter, Ga. Several prominent Atlantans will be added to the directorate.

The Sessions company was founded in Marietta, Ga., in 1887 by Judge W. M. Sessions. The company has expanded to such an extent that loans have been made in large amounts for life insurance companies, savings banks and colleges in 36 states. Company officials state "not a dollar has been lost to an investor." It confines its business strictly to lending money on first mortgages on improved and productive real estate.

Pioneer Georgians.

The Sessions family comes from pioneer Georgia stock and for 39 years has been in the mortgage loan business.

"In 1914 the company established the bond department," said Mr. Alderman. "This was done to take care of small amounts of money for people to be invested in first mortgages with the same protection as large investors. At the same time it provides a means for the smaller investors or savers to save systematically and provide an income or cash estate for the future. This is handled through a trustee, the small amounts being deposited with the trustee and the lump sums invested in first mortgages, the latter being deposited with the trustee for the benefit of the people carrying thrift accounts with this company."

In concluding Mr. Alderman said: "We have selected Atlanta because of its advantages. It is the financial center of the south and we desire to take our place along with other financial institutions striving to render a real service to the people of Atlanta and the south."

CAMP FIRE GIRLS IN AQUATIC MEET AT SWEETWATER

An exciting swimming meet at the Camp Fire Girls' camp at Sweetwater Saturday featured a week's program enjoyed by 75 girls and councellors. The event was given under direction of Miss Ivy Hixon and Miss Isobel Spring, swimming instructors, who declared the girls showed improvement in acquatics.

Thursday afternoon a treasure hunt was led by Emily Perkerson and Lelita Stipe. The treasure, when discovered near a creek, was refreshments for all. Stunt night was celebrated Friday, the Mohawks, Cherokees and Ratapochoh vieing for honors.

250 DIVORCE CASES SLATED FOR TRIAL DURING THIS WEEK

After finding matrimonial waters too turbulent and the good ship Marriage unsteady, 250 dissatisfied husbands and wives will seek divorces this week before Judge G. H. Howard in Fulton superior court.

The calendar which contains 250 cases is considered one of the heaviest faced in the summer divorce session in several years, according to Judge Howard. Records are expected to be smashed in disposition of the cases, court officials said.

More than 60 per cent of cases have been instigated by wives suing for divorce, it was pointed out by courthouse attaches.

Few Contests Seen In Albany Section For Political Honors

Albany, Ga., July 10.—(AP)—While other parts of the state are imbroiled in political struggles, Albany and Dougherty county are anticipating a quiet time in the fall primaries and elections.

Few contests in the local field are anticipated at this time. The second congressional district democratic executive committee has met and fixed September 8 as the date for the primary in which a representative to congress from this district will be chosen. E. E. Cox, incumbent, has made known his intention of asking for reelection, and, so far as it is known, he will have no opposition.

The Dougherty county executive committee also has agreed upon September 8, date of the state primaries, as the time for choosing a state legislator from this county and a state senator from the 10th district. Crugor Westbrook, Albany attorney, is present legislator from Dougherty county, and has offered for reelection, with no opposition in sight. R. L. Clifton, of Lee county, present state senator from the 10th district, will not offer for reelection, and to date no candidate for this office has been announced.

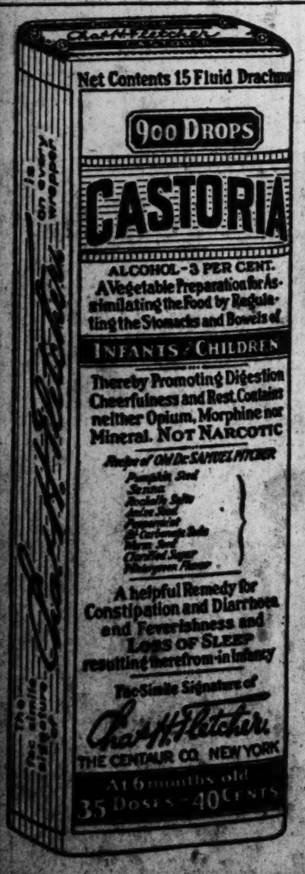

So far as state politics is concerned, Albany has been untouched except for a brief visit by J. J. Brown, commissioner of agriculture, who held a meeting of his friends here.

BUILDING PERMITS GAIN AT THOMASVILLE

Thomasville, Ga., July 10.—(Special.)—A comparison of the building permits of Thomasville for the past two and a half years is a good indication of the continued development here.

The total permits in 1924 were $286,130, which did not include the high school building, the Memorial hospital nor the Winter hotel, as these were either municipally owned or located outside of the city. In 1925 the permits for the year were $448,053.

The permits for the first six months of 1926 total $336,146. One feature of the building this year is the distribution between residences, business building and added hotel facilities.

Children Cry For Fletcher's CASTORIA

The Young Mother.

The ills of infants and children should be so well known to the youngest of mothers that a reminder or a repetition of the symptoms of illness seems unnecessary, yet there are some mothers who overlook a feverish condition, a little colic, or a disposition to be irritable. If not corrected they may lead to serious sickness. And to correct them, to bring Baby back to its happy self, is so easy by the use of Castoria—a medicine prepared just for infants and children. It will regulate the bowels (not force them), aid digestion and so bring quiet and rest.

Fletcher's Castoria has been doing this for over 30 years; regulating the stomach and bowels of infants and children. It has replaced the nauseating Castor Oil, so-called Soothing Syrups, poisonous Paregoric and other vicious concoctions in the homes of true and honest mothers—mothers who love their children.

Those mothers will give their babies foods and medicines especially prepared for infants and children.

Fletcher's Castoria safely relieves

Constipation	Wind Colic	To Sweeten Stomach
Flatulence	Diarrhea	Regulate Bowels

To avoid imitations, always look for the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher. Proven directions on each package. Physicians everywhere recommend it.

TRANSIT WORKERS OF ALL SERVICES ASKED TO STRIKE

Appeal Is Made to Company Union Employees On Subway and Elevated Systems of I. R. T.

ACCIDENTS CAUSED BY GREEN WORKERS

District Attorney May StartProsecution; Strike May Spread to Brooklyn Territory.

New York, July 10.—The rather harmless New York subway strike, which has been inconveniencing thousands but has failed to stop the trains, may, perhaps, spread to such proportions as to tie up the while city.

Thus far this possibility is only the plan—or hope—of the new Consolidated Railway Workers' union, now composed principally of nearly 700 motormen and switchmen who left the Interborough Rapid Transit company's trains five days ago.

The insurgent union is seeking to persuade members of the "company union" of transit employees, not only on the subway and elevated systems of the I. R. T., but an the Brooklyn-Manhattan Transit company and the surface lines as well, to join its ranks and prevent all tracked transportation.

Asks To Be Organized.

Some of the B. M. T. and surface lines men already have asked to be organized, it is claimed at strike headquarters.

As the situation stands now, the I. R. T. is running many of its trains on most of its lines at slow speed and with strikebreakers. A great part of its normal daily passenger list of 2,500,000 is being diverted to the other lines, which in many instances parallel those of the I. R. T.

The I. R. T. is losing money and has been accused of adopting dangerous tactics by employing green men, but the old motormen and switchmen, who hve been joined by 300 elevated men and powerhouse workers, are not winning their strike.

Three hundred strikers are distributing circulars and handbills urging all traction employees to unite for more pay and shorter hours. It was hoped that additional power house men would be the first to augment the strikers' ranks.

Claim Change Monday.

Strike leaders claimed that 235 workers from the important power houses already had joined their ranks and that the full effect of these and subsequent defections would be felt Monday in the rush to business that would follow today's half-holiday and the intervening Sabbath.

The Interboro replied that its cars would continue to operate, that it had a working agreement with the Edison company for emergency power and that it had enough trained men to replace those who walked out of the power houses.

The third accident to occur in the strike occurred today when an empty Jerome avenue train was derailed while in charge of a green motorman.

The first two accidents occurred when a green motorman derailed a subway train so as to cause a fire in the tube and spread subsequent panic among passengers and when a strikebreaker operating a crowded outbound train caused a fire which forced passengers to pick a perilous way to safety.

District Attorney Joab Banton has promised to prosecute subway officials for operating trains with inexperienced motorman and already has obtained a summons charging the I. R. T. with violation of the railroad law.

DECREASE IS SHOWN IN GEORGIA TAXES

Washington, July 10.—(Special.) Income tax collections in Georgia for the fiscal year 1926, which closed June 30, showed a slight decfease from those for the fiscal year 1925, according to treasury figures made public tonight.

Income tax collections for the past fiscal year were $12,437,240.83 as compared with $12,613,731.56 for 1925, a drop of $176,490.73.

Miscellaneous taxes collected in the fiscal year 1926 were $1,679,043.94.

Washington, July 10.—(AP)—New York state paid one-fourth of the nation's internal revenue receipts during the fiscal year, ending June 30, turning over $733,072,365 of the $2,836,112,899 collected by the government from all sources.

The total included $1,972,798,839 from income taxes and $863,314,060 from miscellaneous taxes. New Yorkers paid $568,114,671 on account of income levies and $164,975,694 in miscellaneous taxes.

Despite the reduction in tax rates which went in effect during the year, 33 states show increased income tax collection over the previous year and those reporting reductions had totals only slightly below the previous 12 months. The total income tax collections shower an increase of $211,000,000.

FIRE CRACKER FEAST IS FATAL TO DAWES' DOG

Chicago, July 10.—(AP)—Merigo, a fox terrier owned by Vice President Dawes, is dead because he celebrated the Fourth of July too zealously. Mr. Dawes, returning to his Evanston home from the east today, was met with the news that the animal, brought here from Washington by other members of the family, had died this morning. At first it was thought to have been poisoned, it later was found that Merigo had been eating unexploded firecrackers last Monday.

J. J. Brown Declines To Debate Charles E. Stewart, Charging Character Assassination.

STEWART REPLIES HOTLY TO BROWN

Says Commissioner Was Bold Before Hand-Picked Legislative Committee But Now on Run.

Branding Charles E. Stewart, one of his opponents in this race for reelection as commissioner of agriculture, a "character assassin," J. J. Brown, incumbent, Saturday issued a scathing statement in which he refused Stewart's challenge to joint debate on the stump in Georgia.

In a reply issued later in the day, Stewart voiced his regret at Brown's refusal to joint discussion and declared that he had "no apologies to make for anything I have ever said about the chief of the machine, J. J. Brown."

In his card, Brown recalled an incident during the legislative session of 1923 when Stewart, then representative from Atkinson county, arose to a point of personal privilege and, with papers held in his hand, said that they contained proof that Brown was "a liar, a perjurer and a thief." He also recalled how Stewart later refused to substantiate these charges before a legislative investigation committee and branded his opponent as a "character assassin" and a "moral and physical coward."

Cowardice Charges Fly.

Stewart, in his reply, declared that Brown, "before his hand-picked committee was bold and arrogant, but now when I try to get him before his constituents he ducks and runs like a coward. I shall have more to say later on the stump on the subject."

Brown declared Saturday that he has not yet received the letter which Mr. Stewart says he mailed him on July 8, challenging him to joint debate, and that the only notice he has had has been through the newspapers.

DECISION DELAYED IN PONZI HEARING

'Ma' Ferguson May Not Decide for Three Weeks Whether Financier Goes Back to Boston.

Austin, Texas, July 10.—(AP)—Decision on the request of Massachusetts authorities for the extradition of Charles Ponzi, Boston swindler, was delayed today by Governor Miriam A. Ferguson.

After listening to arguments of attorneys for two hours, the woman governor instructed opposing counsel to eliminate between themselves all questions of fact and to submit briefs on the points of law raised.

Indications were that a decision will not be rendered for three weeks or more.

Attorneys for Ponzi, who is in jail at Houston on a fugitive warrant, contended that Ponzi is illegally held in Texas; that he is an Italian citizen and was arrested on an Italian ship at New Orleans, making the case one of international extradition. It also was argued that Ponzi had been placed in double jeopardy in his prosecution in Massachusetts and that the Texas governor had the right to deny extradition.

Alfred Shirgley, assistant attorney general of Massachusetts, described Ponzi as the "ink fish of the criminal world," and said that he was of such great mentality that he had deceived his own attorneys. He declared that Ponzi had boasted that as long as Governor Ferguson was chief executive in Texas that he would not be taken back to Massachusetts.

When the governor noted that Ponzi was not present, his attorney, Henry Kahn, of Houston, stated that Ponzi had refused to come to Austin to make a personal appeal because officers insisted that he be handcuffed while making the trip.

ATLANTA RANKS THIRD IN SOUTH IN NEW BUILDING

Permits Amounting To $12,472,247 for Six Months Almost Double First Half of 1925.

SOUTHERN STATES GAIN 26 PER CENT

Increase of 11 Per Cent in 96 Leading Cities of Nation Indicates Growing Prosperity.

Washington, July 10.—(Special.)—Atlanta was third in the list of southern cities in building activity during the first six months of this year, according to reports of building permits compiled by S. W. Strauss & Co.

Atlanta issued permits to the amount of $12,472,247, which was almost twice the value of permits issued for the first half of 1925, which was $6,848,185. She was surpassed by Miami, Fla., with $20,751,167, and Houston, Texas, with $16,588,435. Louisville, Ky., was close behind Atlanta with $12,353,145.

Building activity throughout the south generally showed a gain of 26 per cent the first six months this year over the same period last year, according to the report.

Ninety-six leading cities reported a total volue of $288,252,991 for the first half of this year as compared with $228,891,069 last year. An increase of 11 per cent was reported for June this year over June last year in these cities $47,673,461, as compared with $42,996,310.

Very large gains were revealed in Tampa, Jacksonville, St. Petersburg, West Palm Beach, Coral Gables, Fort Lauderdale and Orlando. Activities in Texas closely rivaled those of Florida, the cities showing the largest being Fort Worth, San Antonio, Amarillo and Wichita Falls.

The reports revealed record-breaking operations also in Birmingham, New Orleans, Asheville and Greensboro.

GEORGIA BUILDING GAINS 60 PER CENT.

Georgia showed an increase of more than 60 per cent in new building construction for the first six months of 1926, compared with the corresponding period of 1925, according to the building survey just issued by G. L. Miller & Co., nationally-known investment house specializing in building securities.

Atlanta, together with Savannah and several of the south Georgia cities, showed greater totals in building activity for the first half of 1926 than they did for the entire year of 1925, thus more than doubling their figures in the twelve-month period.

The entire south, according to the survey, reached new heights in new construction for the six-month period, despite the fact that the more northern of the states included in the compilation, such as Maryland, West Virginia, Kentucky and Missouri showed considerable losses. Omitting these border states, the percentage of gain for the remainder of the south, for the six-month period, was 21.4 per cent.

The total of building permits in the southern territory for the six months reached the remarkable figure of $436,160,152, eclipsing last year's total of $400,528,308, by almost 10 per cent, even when the border states which show losses are included.

Atlanta Seventh in U. S.

Atlanta's figures for the first six months of 1926 are given as $12,472,247, compared to $6,848,185 for the first six months of 1925. This city is ranked seventh among 22 leading cities for this year, compared to fourteenth one year ago. Cities showing greater figures this year are: Washington, Baltimore, St. Louis, Miami, Houston and Kansas City.

Figures for Savannah show $1,845,901 for 1926, compared to $723,350 for 1925. Other Georgia cities which show remarkable gains include Thomasville, with $336,046, compared to $127,075 one year ago and Waycross, with $323,510 compared to $171,960.

The largest gain for the six months period, by states, are shown by Mississippi, Georgia, Texas, Florida and North Carolina, which ranked in the order named.

Florida continued to gain on its 1925 program each month until June, when abnormal 1925 totals in Palm Beach and Miami caused a slight loss. In spite of this Florida as a whole gained 32 per cent for the first half year.

"The real sensation of the period," says the survey, "was the showing made by Texas, which ranked second in total value of permits and third in percentage of gain. Its principal cities reported a total of $79,040,523, against $51,771,191 last year, a gain of 52 per cent."

It is pointed out that the reports do not reflect textile mill expansion,

SUBMARINE DEAD ARE RECOVERED; SEARCH IS ENDED

New York, July 10.—(AP)—A bright page was added to the tragic history of the submarine S-51 today.

Beneath a blistering sun and retarded by transportation strikes, thousands made their way to Brooklyn navy yard to strew flowers on the rusted, gnashed and barnacled hulk in which 33 officers and men met death. The visitors, some of them relatives of the men who perished when the submersible was rammed and sunk last September, stood bareheaded in reverent contemplation of the wrecked submarine.

Her silken flag still fluttered at half mast. Marines paced silent guard at her sides. On the deck was a giant wreath of flowers navy yard employees had put beside a smaller one placed by the hands of Lieutenant Commander Richard E. Byrd.

Search for Bodies Ends.

By the time the crowd was admitted to the navy yard, the search for dead had been abandoned, and the number of bodies the steel sepulchre contained was fixed at 18 by Rear Admiral Plunkett, commandant of the navy yard. All of them were taken out yesterday, but a further search had been made during the morning.

Of the 18 removed all had been identified. It is expected that relatives will provide private funerals for the identified dead.

The last roll call for the crew of 36 men found seven missing and navy officers said no trace of these may ever be found. Three of them are officers, including the commander of the submarine, Lieutenant R. H. Dodson, who was last seen on the bridge.

What ship's records were found, officers said, were in such condition that they may be of no value in ascertaining what happened on the ship before she sank. This was not considered a great loss, inasmuch as it was believed there had been no time to make entries after the iron prow of the Savannah line steamer City of Rome crashed into the submarine.

The court of inquiry that had been investigating the cause of the S-51 going aground in East river while being towed to the navy yard last Wednesday, adjourned until Monday. It is expected to take up investigation of the sinking of the S-51 off Block Island when it resumes sessions.

Six Bodies Identified.

Six more bodies were identified today. They were:

PROMINENT WOMAN OF SAVANNAH HURT IN AUTO ACCIDENT

Savannah, Ga., July 10.—(AP)—Miss Julia Eve, daughter of J. Hammond Eve, former representative in the general assembly of Georgia from Savannah, was seriously injured late tonight in an automobile accident on the Tybee road. The automobile, driven by Walter Strong, turned over three times.

Miss Eve is at a local hospital and the extent of her injuries had not been determined late tonight.

ATLANTA PLAYERS PROMISE GREATEST HIT IN 'ROBIN HOOD'

Presentation of DeKoven Comedy Expected To Draw Huge Crowds During Coming Week.

De Koven's "Robin Hood," in every way the greatest, the most musical, the most enduring of American comic operas, is to be presented this week at the Atlanta theater by the Municipal Opera association.

"Atlanta has heard 'Robin Hood' often before," declare those responsible for staging the masterpiece of Reginald de Koven and Harry B. Smith. "But it has never heard such a production as this will be. Not even the old Bostonians, who first produced it, had such scenery, costumes and everything demanded of the stage today. And as for the cast, none other perhaps could be assembled."

Jefferson D'Angelis, prince of comedians, has come from New York especially for the role of the Sheriff of Nottingham, one of his famous parts. Anne Yago, the velvet-voiced contralto, will have her first real chance of the season as Alan a Dale, and is expected to grave the tights and doublet well—and every one looks forward to hearing her sing "O Promise Me." Vera Myers will make a most charming Annabel, with the lovely "When a Maiden Weds," and Mary Leila Patterson will be the Maid Marian, with the "Forest Song."

Music and Comedy.

Francis Tyler will have his first real singing role this year as Friar Tuck and share the comedy with Mr. D'Angelis and Billy McLeod, who will play Guy of Gisborne, the sheriff's cowardly chum. Louis Templeman will be Little John, with the great baritone song, "Brown October Ale," while Arthur Burckley will play Robin Hood. Trumie Johnson, of Atlanta, will have a good character part as Dame Durden.

"Robin Hood" is a long succession of beautiful musical numbers interspersed with rollicking comedy, but

TWELVE ARE DEAD AS WAVE OF HEAT GRIPS NEW YORK

More Than a Score of Prostrations Recorded in One Day; Relief Is Seen For City.

New York, July 10.—Twelve deaths from heat were reported in New York tonight, at the close of the hottest day the city had suffered this summer and the warmest July 10 in 15 years. More than a score of prostrations also were recorded in the metropolitan area, but relief was promised, as a wind began to sweep in from the sea at nightfall and the weather bureau predicted the possibility of rain during the night.

For a period during the day the heat was intense. The thermometer registered 94 at 2:45 p. m. Not since July 10, 1911, which achieved a temperature of 95, had this day of the month suffered so from that fatal combination of heat and humidity.

Over the same route taken by the famous marathon runner when he hastened to inform the Athenians of the Hellenic victory over the Persian hordes, American engineers now are building a great aqueduct to supply the ever-growing population of Athens and Piraeus with water. The new system, costing $10,000,000, replaces the antiquated Hadrian aqueduct, built by the famous emperor of that name 140 years after the death of Christ.

Heat Is Unusual.

Elsewhere in the east, and along the Atlantic seaboard, the heat was unusual and thirteen deaths were reported from different sections.

The sweltering condition of confined New York sent thousands scurrying to the beaches and the mountains tonight. Trains were jammed, roads were packed with slow-moving lines of motors, and the crippled subway system was taxed heavily in transporting the fleeing urbanites to railroad terminals and country places.

The promise that the heat would be dissipated was not so impressive but what thousands of New Yorkers in the closely cramped tenement districts prepared for another night in the open. These sufferers were ready to repeat their outing of last night, when they slept on the benches or grassy plots of the parks, on fire escapes or the beaches. For the first time, the police of Coney Island are permitting sleeping on the beach.

RELIEF IS PROMISED TO VICTIMS OF HEAT.

Washington, July 10. — The storm which cooled the west will bring relief over the week-end to the sweltering east, where the terrific heat of the last two days has taken its first toll of death this summer.

The tail-end of the storm will bring general thundershowers over the eastern part of the country as it goes out to sea.

The weather bureau holds out hope that cooler weather will prevail in the east for several days.

Four prostrations were reported here, but no deaths from the heat.

LEADERS CONFER ON FAR-REACHING SCHOOL CHANGES

$100,000 REQUIRED TO START COLLEGE

Under Proposal a New Girls' High School Would Be Located in Eighth or Ninth Ward.

BY HERMAN D. HANCOCK.

Establishment of a co-educational junior college in connection with the Atlanta public school system is planned, it was learned Saturday, when it became known that leaders in the Atlanta school system have a scheme afoot to abandon the present Girls' High school site and utilize it, the old city stockade and the Normal training school as a nucleus for the new project.

Willis A. Sutton, superintendent of schools; R. R. Ritchie, assistant superintendent; M. E. Coleman, director of the census and attendance department, and Mrs. Z. V. Peterson, member of the board of education from the 11th ward, have held several conferences concerning the matter, at which tentative plans were laid.

A new girls' high school would be constructed in the eighth or ninth ward, if plans are carried out, and the county would be asked to contribute $100,000 annually for the college and be given the privilege of sending county students to the school without tuition charges. Thus, all girls and boys in Fulton county would have a two-year college course furnished on the public school plan.

Other Plans Afoot.

It also is reported that means might be devised to assist students in completing courses and colleges at universities in this and nearby cities, but definite plans thus far have not been perfected, it was said.

If the proposal is put through it would mean that every school student in Fulton county would be a potential college graduate, inasmuch as the city would furnish two years of the college course and the junior and senior college years could be completed while students lived at home.

While those interested in the latest educational program declined to affirm or deny reports, it was rumored persistently that they contemplate submitting such a proposal to the board of education after details have been worked out.

It has been pointed out that only 18 girls attend Girls' High school from the third ward and that there are only 23 from the third ward. This would show conclusively that the present girls' high school site is not the logical location, and this has brought about the move to locate the school in the eighth or ninth ward.

Although no definite estimate of cost of the contemplated city college could be obtained, it is believed $100,000 would place it on a working basis. The Girls' High school would be used as an academic building, the old stockade as a technical and engineering school and the Atlanta Normal school as a training school for teachers, under the proposed plan. The 97-acre tract of land on which Girls' high is located would be the campus for the college.

The addition of a junior college would relieve congestion at state and other schools in Fulton county and would make room for hundreds of other students at these places, it is pointed out. In addition to this, the school would furnish a college course without cost to students. It is estimated that educational standards of Atlanta would be greatly boosted by the school, which it is expected will be given general approval. It would be the only institution of its kind in the south.

If the school board approves the plan it will agree to support the added one-mill school tax for Fulton county provided the county will in return place the $100,000 annually at the disposal of city school officials for operation of the school, according to a plan devised by conferees, it was learned.

Information obtained Saturday night was to the effect that establishment of this school is not a part of the program outlined for school improvements in the $3,500,000 to be provided for schools by the recent bond issue, but is a separate proposal. The only additional cost to the city at the outset would be the erection of a new girls' high school, it is pointed out.

Even though present plans are rather indefinite and have not as yet been submitted to the board or others except the group of school officials, it is said that establishment of the school would be the greatest progressive educational step taken by Atlanta in the past quarter of a century and would place the city and Georgia to the fore in educational advantages.

Atlanta is known as a city of colleges and has established the reputation of fast becoming the educational and cultural center of the entire south. Addition of the proposed new college would be another distinct advance in furnishing to Atlantans and Georgians a "public college" owned and operated under the direction of the public school system, leaders in educational circles point out.

WHAT A CHANGED WORLD WITHOUT AUTOMOBILES

Thousands are driving automobiles who were born since automobiles came into existence, and there are other thousands who can well remember when the horse and buggy was the private form of rapid transportation.

The world could not go back to the horse and buggy, and it will not need to do so. As nearly perfect as the auto is today, improvements are still being made and prices coming down.

There is an automobile for every purse, from the new de luxe sedan to the good used car, and you can find advertised in this issue of The Constitution the car you desire at a price you can easily pay.

FLORIDA RATE HEARING CLOSES

Norfolk, Va., July 10.—(AP)—The hearing at Virginia Beach before Attorney-Examiner F. C. Hillyer, of the interstate commerce commission, on the petition of Florida fruit and vegetable shippers for revised freight rates on their products was brought to a close today.

The ending of the case was expedited by a ruling of Examiner Hillyer throwing out the testimony given yesterday by T. D. Gohegan, rate analyst for the shippers, regarding the earnings of the Atlantic Coast Line railroad from the transportation of fruits and vegetables.

Mr. Gohegan read statistics which counsel for the railroad objected to on the grounds they contained confidential information prepared for the railroad. Introduction of the statement brought on a verbal clash in which Frank W. Gwathmey, attorney for the railroads, referred to the witness as a "snooper" and expressed the belief the roads were dealing with a "crowd of snoopers."

Further testimony by Mr. Gohegan regarding the statistics was stopped under Examiner Hillyer's ruling. A request was made yesterday by Mr. Gwathmey to have this portion of Mr. Gohegan's testimony stricken from the records and discontinued. It followed the refusal of Mr. Gohegan to give the source of his information.

The railroad attorney said the figures would be submitted to the commission if they were called for.

Postponement was given until November 1 for filing briefs by both parties, after which a tentative report will be made by Examiner Hillyer to the interstate commerce commission.

Mr. Gohegan closed his testimony with exhibits of maps and statistics, in which he endeavored to show that the rates charged Florida shippers were much higher in comparison with those charged shippers of California and the southwest.

George H. Parker, special representative of the Florida lines, submitted testimony that the handling of produce cars required additional work on the part of the railroads in switching and in special short hauls for icing necessary while the cars were waiting for bills of lading.

This testimony was at variance with that of Fred G. Pettijohn, chief accountant for the railroad commission of Florida, who said the cars which were switched off at yards were a small percentage of the total shipments, and that most of the trains were sent straight through with only a change of engine and caboose. He also declared that a certain number of switch engines and crews were required and not added to on account of produce shipments.

Another witness was George W. Oliver, railroad rate analyst, who criticised some of the defendants' statistics and evidence, in rebuttal, J. H. Tench, rate expert for the railroad commission of Florida, testified in behalf of the complainants.

"LIAR AND COWARD" CHARGES ARE HURLED

However, he adds that this makes no difference to his reply.

"If the challenge had been received by me," he said, "it would not have altered my position or my answer. I will not discuss or debate anything anywhere with Charley Stewart."

The commissioner's statement in full follows:

"Charlie Stewart furnished The Constitution with a copy of a letter which he claimed he sent to me under date of July 8. At this time, July 10, this letter has not been received. If it had been received it would not alter my position or my answer.

Charges Character Assassination.

"I will not discuss or debate anything, anywhere with Charlie Stewart, a proven character assassin. To do so I would have to stultify my manhood and my honor. I will do neither.

"To brand anyone as a character assassin is a severe indictment, and I would not dare make such a statement if Charlie Stewart had not by his public acts established his own record and reputation.

"For the benefit of those who do not keep up with slimy records of unprincipled men, let me briefly recite one specific instance—an instance in which I was the victim of Charlie Stewart's evil mind and foul tongue.

"During the last days of the session of the general assembly of 1925 a resolution had been introduced to investigate the department of agriculture. While this resolution was under consideration Charlie Stewart, then a member of the general assembly, recognized by the speaker of the house under a question of personal privilege, held aloft a folded scrap of paper and stated: 'I hold in my hand documentary evidence that will convict J. J. Brown of being a liar, purjurer and a thief.'

Committee Appointed.

"The house of representatives was amazed—such charge was unprecedented—but the house acted promptly. A special joint committee of house and senate was appointed to investigate J. J. Brown and the department.

"This committee summoned Charlie Stewart to present the evidence he claimed to have against my character. Under first one and then another lying pretext, he failed and refused to produce his faked evidence. The committee had to threaten Stewart with contempt proceedings to make him testify. When compelled to go on the witness stand, he claimed not to remember anything as to the contents of the papers. Before this committee, Charlie Stewart revealed himself in his true character as an unscrupulous lying, moral and physical coward.

"Charlie Stewart didn't produce the evidence he claimed he had because he knew he was telling a miserable, contemptible lie when he made his privileged statement on the floor of the general assembly. He had nothing to produce, neither did he have honor and manhood enough in his make-up to confess to the committee that he lied when he made his venomous attack on me on the floor of the general assembly.

"No! I can't and won't discuss or debate anything, anywhere with Charlie Stewart, a proven, self-convicted character assassin.

(Signed) "J. J. BROWN."

Stewart's Reply.

Mr. Stewart's rejoinder was as follows:

"Whom the Gods would destroy they first make mad. The Gods are saving Georgia. I have no apologies to make for anything I have ever said about the chief of the machine, J. J. Brown. I regret that he refuses to meet me in a joint discussion of his official record and the rottenness of his department before Georgia audiences. Before his hand-picked committee, he was bold and arrogant, now when I try to get him before his constituents he ducks and runs like a cowawd. I shall have more to say later on the stump on the subject.

(Signed)

"CHARLES E. STEWART."

James H. Mills, also a candidate for the commissionership of agriculture, issued a statement Saturday in which he charged that Mr. Brown is busy lining up department employees all over the state for the primary fight.

"The present campaign," said Mr. Mills, "has resolved itself into a statewide battle between the farmers and the oil inspectors. The last week has given me renewed strength and enthusiasm. Every report is encouraging. The people everywhere have received me enthusiastically and my mail is filled with letters pledging support."

ATLANTA PLAYERS IN "ROBIN HOOD"

there is one air that always is a problem—the famous bass number called "The Armorer's Song." It is always the great hit of the comic opera—if the basso can sing it.

Never Fails to Please.

John Hendricks has been engaged especially for the role of Will Scarlett, the armorer. Those who have heard him at rehearsals have been delighted with his voice, his purity of diction, his ease in acting. For two years Mr. Hendricks has been dean of the voice department at Brenau university, but before that he had years on the stage to his credit—in light opera, grand opera, concert and the New York Hippodrome. He is a pupil of the great Tomasso Salvini and an accomplsihed actor as well as singer.

"Robin Hood" has never failed to please an audinece since Harry Smith and De Koven completed it, more than 25 years ago. Nothing they did before or since has equaled it. Comic operas have come and gone, but "Robin Hood" will live, it appears, as long as the world loves music. There is a song for everybody in the cast, quartets, quintets and choruses. Some of the music is difficult; all of it is charming.

There could be no happier idea for a comic opera than the romantic story of Robin Hood and his merry men in Sherwood forest, with the Sheriff of Nottingham as the comic villain; the wandering tinkers, the vagabond Friar Tuck, love-sick Alan a Dale, sweet Maid Marian and the romping Annabel.

From a scenic standpoint, "Robin Hood" will equal and perhaps surpass the production of "Naughty Marietta" last week. The stagecraft studios have worked hard upon the three acts—the market place in Nottingham, of the period of the middle age; the Sherwood forest and the greenwood tree, and the exterior of the sheriff's castle, with Robin Hood's prison. The costumes are beautiful and the production bids fair to set the city to talking.

Already the sale of tickets presages sold-out houses. The longest line of the season waited at the opening of the box office last Thursday and the sale has been steady since then. The usual Wednesday and Saturday matinees will be given.

Quebec for Vacation.

St. Albans, Vt.—At least 4,500 American motorists had a holiday in Quebec. The reason for the selection of such a place perhaps is shown by the fact that various bottles were confiscated as their cars came back across the line.

Modernism Turns Turkish

VEIL IS FOUND COOLER THAN HAT

Women Away From Sultans

New York, July 10.—The march of modernism is carrying the maidens of Turkey away from the shadows of ancient harem scenes.

Miss Kathryn Newell Adams, president of the Constantinople Women's college, returned from Turkey, says that the modern Turkish women are avoiding sultans and are turning their eyes toward the United States and other foreign countries where they hope to take their places as progressive, independent members of the twentieth century civilization.

Even the veil, that mysterious article of Turkish women's wear, is worn today only for comfort as it is cooler and cheaper than a hat, Miss Adams says. The women no longer hide their faces with this feminine headpiece, but wind it around their foreheads somewhat in the manner employed by the American negroes with the bandana handkerchief.

"Little Cabinet" In Control

WHEELS RUN SMOOTHLY JUST THE SAME

As High Officials Leave

BY THOMAS L. STOKES.

Washington, July 10.—Just about this time of the year there begins a change of administration here, all within the family, whether it be republican or democratic.

It is beginning now—the transfer of control from the cabinet proper to the "little cabinet," that group of undersecretaries who are second in command in every department, many of whom have risen from the ranks over a long period of years.

Vacation time is here. President Coolidge has gone, and members of the cabinet soon will begin to scatter to summer homes in the mountains or along the seashore. They do not all leave at once, and they do not stay away the whole summer. If necessity arises, they return here to handle any momentous problem. Usually there are few, if any, such problems in the summer, with congress away and a general lull of governmental business.

When they leave the mantle falls upon the undersecretaries and assistants, and business goes on as usual, for these officials have the details of their departmental work at their fingers' ends, since during the winter season they must handle the routine and act often as the buffer for the cabinet member who heads the department.

Wheels Run Smoothly.

There have been times when the whole cabinet has been out of town. This may happen this summer, as there is nothing on the horizon now which would compel their attendance. But the wheels have turned just as smoothly before, and probably will again.

This government of the "little cabinet" is such a regular event every summer that its members are organized for business. Within a few days, when the summer exodus of cabinet members gets well under way, they will hold a dinner to discuss their problems. Presidents are often their guests, and probably get some pointers out of the discussions. President Harding used to attend their dinners. When they gather about the table this summer one of those who sat with them last year will be absent, Secretary of War Davis, who was once second in command at the war department. Hanford McNider, a new comer, will sit in that place.

Under Secretary Crew, of the state department, also is a newcomer, though long in the diplomatic service. Crew probably will not spend much time at the head of the department, however, as Secretary Kellogg plans to stay here most of the summer, as he is the ranking government official when the president and vice president are away.

Mellon to Europe.

Garrard B. Winston, under secretary of the treasury, is a veteran member of the "little cabinet," and will be called upon early to step into Secretary Mellon's place, as the secretary will leave soon for Europe. William J. Donovan, "Wild Bill" of war fame, will represent the department of justice about the table: John H. Bartlett, the post office department; Theodore Douglas Robinson, the navy department; Edward C. Finney, a veteran, the interior department which he heads now in the absence of Secretary Work; R. W. Dunlap, the department of agriculture; J. Walter Drake, the commerce department, and Robe Carl White, the labor department.

These are the men whom those with special and important business will have to see during most of the summer. For a brief span, they will be clothed with that aura which surrounds cabinet members.

There is a second line of defense beyond them. New assistant secretaries lean much on the experience and advice of veteran officers who are under them, and counsel from these second line men probably will be reflected in official acts this summer.

Then there is the white house. Rudolph Forster, executive clerk for 25 years, will be on the job as usual, and will ease the vacation for the president by heading off a batch of routine business here.

107 COMMUNITIES FIND PRIVATE ENTERPRISE CHEAPER

BY ARTHUR M. EVANS
(By Leased Wire to The Constitution and The Chicago Tribune.)

Ames, Iowa, July 10.—Municipal ownership has come a cropper out here where the tall corn grows. Some 107 communities have found it cheaper and better to let private enterprise supply their electric light and power and have abandoned municipal projects. Of these 59 have closed up shop in the last four years, 28 of them putting up the shutters within the last year.

The remarkable extension of high tension lines within the last few years, carrying energy from great generating stations which can be operated more economically, is the reason. The towns which have given up municipal ownership in the last few years are getting lower rates. They are getting uniform voltage, instead of flickering bulbs while they all now have 24-hour service where before the current was on only 12 to 18 hours a day.

Increase of Energy.

The increase of electrical energy in this agricultural state has been little short of prodigious. Twelve years ago there were not much more than 100 miles of transmission lines in the state. Today there are 16,000 miles of high voltage lines, and Iowa is said to have a wider distribution of electric service than any other state. The lines strike in nearly every township. There are 914 incorporated cities and towns in the state, and out of these 880 have electric service. The other 34 are hamlets, all but two of them having less than 300 population. Joe Carmichael, an authority on Iowa's electric utilities, figures that of the total urban population 99.46 per cent live in towns and cities with electric service.

There are 72 others which own their distribution system, but buy their energy from transmission lines—this in addition to the 107 cities that have forsaken municipal ownership absolutely.

Rates Are Lowered.

One thing it has meant is cheaper rates. In 1922 the revenue per kilowatt hour of total output was 1.8 cents for commercial establishments as against 6.3 cents for the municipal ownership plants. This is due to the rate for power. Current for lighting costs about the same for both types of plant, but on current for power the average kilowatt hour revenue was 1.5 cents for the commercial as against 5 cents for the municipal plants.

There is no municipal ownership of street railways. Many of them would like to sell, but could not get municipalities to buy. They are having hard sledding. There are nearly 700,000 automobiles and trucks in the state. They have a saying out here that if four persons were put in every automobile the whole population could be transported out of Iowa within a day. The street cars operate under local franchises.

Commerce Board Scheduled To Act On Big Problems

BY THOMAS L. STOKES.

Washington, July 10.—Decisions affecting the course of future transcome from the interstate commerce portation history in this country will commission this summer. It will be a most significant period.

These issues are at stake:

1—Government policy toward giant mergers.

2 — Valuation principles, upon which rest the whole question of rates.

3—Regulation of motor bus transportation lines.

The settlement of every one of these issues will directly affect the average citizen who rides on trains or buses or ships through them.

Motor Bus Probe.

The commission will begin its nation-wide investigation of the motor bus situation the last of this month as a basis for recommendations to congress as to regulatory legislation.

It now has before it six applications for mergers, and applications for three large-scale consolidations will come before it soon, including the Nickel Plate merger, sponsored by the young railroad magnates of Cleveland, the Van Sweringen brothers, which was turned down by the commission several weeks ago because of the financial arrangement, the commission holding that it did not protect stockholders sufficiently. The Van Sweringens are remodeling their plan.

Will Set Precedent.

In its decision upon the new Van Sweringen merger and, others, the commission will write the government policy that will be a precedent in the future. Opposition to the Nickel Plate merger came last year from the independent group in congress, and it was believed that the reaction against large business combines generally which flared up some months ago was a factor in the commission's decision to turn down the plan as it stood. A change of government policy became noticeable, reflected recently in an address by Assistant Attorney General Donovan.

If the commission approves the Van Sweringen merger in its new form it will open the way to other large railroad consolidations, which the administration has favored, sponsoring a bill which has spent a long time quietly in congress.

The valuation problem, which the commission has had before it for some 10 years or more, is up for a decision in a comparatively insignificant case, that of a little railroad, the St. Louis and O'Fallon, which runs for nine miles out of St. Louis.

Working on Valuation.

For ten years or more the commission has been working on a valuation of all the railroads in the country, which is but little more than half completed. This valuation will form the basis for future rate structures as well as for "re-capture" of earnings under the Esch-Cummins act.

It has run up against a difference in theory as to valuation, the railroads insist the valuation should be based on the cost of reproduction at the present time. Those who have banded themselves together under Senator Norris, of Nebraska, republican insurgent, in the national conference on valuation, hold that orginial cost should be the measuring stick. Donald Richberg, an attorney, speaks for them. The independent group in congress contends that the valuation the I. C. C. is making will be too high.

The commission fixed a tentative valuation of the St. Louis and O'Fallon at about $850,000, and seeks to recover one-half of all profits above six per cent on that amount, as provided by the Esch-Cummins act. The railroad fixes its valuation at nearly twice this amount.

Whatever system of valuation is fixed in the case will apply to all railroads and public utilities in the United States.

12-Mile Limit No Longer Shelter for Rum Runners

LIQUOR CARGOES CAN NOW BE CHASED ACROSS OCEAN

New York, July 10.—An American rum runner may now be chased across the ocean. The 12-mile limit offers no more protection to American ships engaged in the transportation of intoxicants.

The United States court of appeals here has decided that an American ship on the high seas "retains her allegiance to the United Sates" and that "it is quite well recognized that every nation has the right to bind its own subjects to its own laws in every place."

The decision was made in connection with a government libel against rum runner Underwriter. The court upheld the coast guard in boarding vessels beyond the 12-mile-limit applicable to foreign craft.

SEIZURES WILL GO TO NEW YORK.

New London, Conn., uJly 10.—The decision of the New York court of appeals relative to the non-application of the 12-mile-limit ruling to American ships seized as rum runners, coast guard authorities indicated that all seizures made by coast guard patrols from section base four, located in this city, would from now on be taken to New York so that convictions might be obtained more easily.

Cost guard officers have repeatedly said they could not obtain convictions in the state of Connecticut.

Throughout the hisory of the tug Underwriter, which figured in the New York decision as a rum runner, each time it has been captured by local coast guard vessels and brought to New Haven for trial in federal court, the coast guard has always lost the case. The Underwriter has never been convicted, nor has Federal Judge Thomas at New Haven ever recognized a coast guard seizure outside of the 12-mile limit.

Surgeon May Help Seances To Show Public Gullibility

DR. CRANDON PLANS EXPOSE OF "MYSTERIES"

London, July 10.—Dr. L. R. G. Crandon, distinguished Boston surgeon, may help his wife, "Margery," stage fraudulent seances in order eventually to expose the gullibility of observers and thus discredit spiritualists throughout the world, E. J. Dingwall, psychical research investigator, suggests after an exhaustive study of Mrs. Crandon's work.

Dingwall admits, after two years spent in preparation of a report for the British Society of Psychical Research, that he cannot be positive whether Mrs. Crandon's seances are genuine. But in a report published today he points to the fact that Dr. Crandon has refused "on totally inadequate grounds" to submit to many tests which would make fraud impossible.

In a total of 29 seances held by "Margery," in Boston, bells rang and teleplastic substances appeared. Dingwall admits he is puzzled over the fact that Crandon, a prominent surgeon, has refused to permit the tests suggested. He declares that if the wife's work as a medium is fraudulent it is practically certain that Dr. Crandon must assist her in it.

"If Dr. Crandon does assist 'Margery' in this work the only possible explanation is that he wants to test the gullibility of observers so that he can eventually tell what has happened and thus discredit spiritualists," Dingwall says.

In the last two seances given by "Margery," Dingwall points out, Dr. Crandon has permitted more rigid tests and both seances have failed completely.

Hall of Fame To Get Statue Of La Follette

(By Leased Wire to The Constitution and The Chicago Tribune.)

Madison, Wis., July 10.—Governor John G. Blaine announced today that he has contracted with J. O. Davidson, New York city, for a statue of Senator Robert M. LaFollette to be placed in the hall of fame, or statuary hall, at the capitol in Washington, according to the type of figure and design selected by Mrs. La Follette and the family for the sum of $40,000, the price of the completed work.

Mr. Davidson is a former Wisconsin man, raised in Milwaukee, and was a life-long

NO CHANGE SEEN IN DEBT TERMS

Washington, July 10.—(AP)—Finance Minister Caillaux told the French chamber of deputies last night that France was "negotiating with Washington" regarding the war debt situation, but responsible officials here do not so understand it.

They said today there had been no recent "negotiations" on that subject between Washington and Paris; previously they have stated repeatedly that no change in the Franco-American debt settlement, whose ratification has been partially completed in congress, is in prospect.

Beyond these assertions they are not inclined to go. It is insisted that no one with authority to speak for the government is making any promises or receiving any overtures for an easement of the settlement terms as laid down in the agreement signed by Ambassador Berenger before he left Washington.

Recently Secretary Mellon denied flatly a published report that he had sent a personal letter assuring French officials that certain optional phrases of the agreement would not be invoked by the United States. All other reports that American officials are moving directly or indirectly toward modification of the agreement have likewise met with quick denials here.

One member of the American debt commission said today that the meeting of Governor Strong of the New York Federal Reserve bank, and Montagu Norman, head of the Bank of England, in south France is totally devoid of significance in so far as this government is concerned.

Meantime the policy of Washington on the question of private French loans remains unchanged. It was declared today that no application for a loan had been referred here, nor had there been any intimation that France intended to seek a loan in this country.

HOOVER ON THE SOUTH.

Secretary of Commerce Herbert Hoover, who recently delivered the baccalaureate address at the University of Georgia commencement, in a statement issued Friday declared the present movement of people into the south "has become the largest human migration in history." He regards as responsible factors the development of hydro-electric power, and along with this the development of the textile and the iron and steel industries. He regards the Florida movement of 1925 as of invaluable service, not only to Florida, but to all the southeastern states.

No man in America is more competent to analyze industrial and economic conditions than Secretary Hoover. His department is in close contact with every branch of trade, and of the conditions that influence those trades. Under his administrative supervision are the agencies regulating practically every industry, utility and business that come under federal supervision. He is in touch with the inter-relationship of American and foreign commerce, and through the census activities that are also under his supervision he is in touch with the swing of every statistical pendulum. He speaks of the south, therefore, not only as an expert business engineer and economist, but as one in close touch with facts that even the public does not know, and cannot know except through the surveys made in one or another of the many activities of the department of commerce.

The movement to the south is wthout a precedent and, as he further declared in his statement, "it will continue until the development and the progress have reached their peak." That is to say, it will continue so long as the south's raw production can absorb industrial enterprises, and until her resources have been fully utilized—a long path ahead strewn with rich promises.

The secretary did not mention the one outstanding factor that gives the south a monopoly in industrial and agricultural opportunities—the climate. There is but one southern climate on the North American continent, but one year-around outdoor working climate. And it is an asset that is priceless. He did not speak of the stability and the standardization of labor in the south, due to the small percentage of immigrant blood, and the hardy, tractable, dependable, resourceful Anglo-Saxon element that provides that condition that no other section in the nation can provide.

The south today, by every token, is the one most outstanding section of opportunity in the western hemisphere.

THE MEDIATION SYSTEM.

With the personnel of the board complete and the election of former Congressman Samuel E. Winslow, of Massachusetts, to the chairmanship, the government's new mediation system for the "settlement" of railroad and other labor disputes, embarks on a new and untried path, and one fraught with many difficulties and no little apprehension as to success.

The board is clothed with no authority whatever other than to summon witnesses, hold a hearing and give publicity to it, and then do some "advising," with a full stop right there. The law constituting and controlling it is as teethless as a barn-yard hen.

And yet, at that, it is as able to function to advantage as the old railroad labor board, which was perhaps the most worthless agency that ever paraded under a federal statute. The labor board had all kinds of "authority" of the farcical type that it might be obeyed or not at the will of either or both of the parties in dispute. It had the "authority" under law to demand this and that, and the railroads on the one hand and the labor unions on the other, had by the same law the unquestioned written authority not to yield or to yield as they pleased. Therefore one provision of the law completely nullified the other, and made the whole worse than useless because it bcame the object of both ridicule and burlesque.

The new mediation law is not much better, but it cannot be any worse. It is simply a lame, almost cowardly attempt to do something, with "a fear and a trembling" of the political lashes on both sides.

We will never get adequate law enforcement, or constructive economic laws touching industrial disputes, or the greater involved interests of the whole people, until congress becomes courageous enough to legislate without the all-controlling force of political expediency.

The new mediation system deserves a fair trial, of course. It will get it. But in its very face it is a weak and incompetent vehicle to carry one of the nation's heaviest problems.

THE WORLD PROBLEM.

In the multitude of patriotic addresses delivered on Independence day by men who stand foremost in the nation's economic and educational and public life, one note sounded almost in unison, and rang around the country in an unchallengable echo—the interdependence of nations.

Taking account of this paramount sentiment and commenting on it, The New York Times sees a multiplication of signs indicating that "the nations feel the need of drawing together and working together" more than ever before.

The present feeling between France and Germany is better than any one would have dared to predict seven years ago. Individual citizens are moving faster than their governments. French and German industrialists are ready to combine for their common advantage, and a liberal commercial treaty between Germany and France will soon be completed.

Says The Times:

"Patriotic Americans and patriotic Englishmen are speaking with more freedom and sincerity than ever of the possibilities of good for the world which lie in cooperation between Great Britain and the United States for the purpose of establishing peace and security, and keeping our modern industrial civilization prosperous and contented in all its parts. Of all countries on earth it may be said with confidence that they are looking with increasing eagerness and desire for some form of international agency through which the general good of all may be promoted and safeguarded."

American independence is secure. The integrity of her institutions is secure. The great problem confronting this and all nations is the world problem. Time was perhaps when we could build a Chinese wall around this country and live within it. That time has passed. Our agriculture is dependent upon foreign markets. Our industry is dependent upon foreign markets. Foreign markets are dependent upon American cooperation. And thus it goes. We must help the other and be helped by the other. There is no getting around it. Hence the necessity for a broad and liberal view of international cooperation.

A SESQUI FIELD SONG.

The sesqui-centennial is getting along all right perhaps. It is said to be a fine exposition with lots of color and lots of light and a panorama of flags, and some excellent exhibits and educational features. But there is apparently something lacking. Perhaps we take it too seriously because it happens to be in celebration of the 150th anniversary of the Declaration of Independence. Perhaps we associate it too much with patriotism and not enough with fun. Surely Philadelphia is a fine place to visit, and Pennsylvania is a profitable state to vote in. Any way a little jingle may help things to get away from the gloom that some of the reformers who fail to reform anything seem to dispense. We all recall the little lyric that made the St. Louis fair a byword all over America in 1904. It ran something like this—

Meet me at St. Loule, Louie,
Meet me at the fair!
Don't tell me the lights are shining
Any place but there!
We'll see the hoochy-coochie,
I'll be your tootsy-wootsie,
If you'll meet me at St. Louis, Louie,
Meet me at the fair!

Why not a field song for the sesqui? A song of the flag and of the liberty bell—a song that will ring in everybody's tuneful soul like "Little Annie Rooney" did when Annie was little?

The New York World has seen the handwriting. It urges a song to avoid the sesqui's "danger of being a flop." It suggests that George M. Cohan meet the emergency. But Cohan's in retirement. Since "Over There" swept the world like a battle cry he has spent so much of his time "over there" that he may have forgotten that there is a sesqui-centennial exposition. Let it come out of the south, just as the Declaration of Independence came out of the south, and the federal constitution came out of the south, and the "Star-Spangled Banner" came out of the south, and the "Bivouac of the Dead" came out of the south. We nominate our Mr. Frank L. Stanton, Georgia's poet-laureate, to do the job.

SCHOOL APPROPRIATIONS.

According to the annual report of Comptroller General Wright, the common schools in Georgia will receive $5,003,200 in state appropriations in 1926, and the higher institutions combined will receive $1,349,064 during the same period.

Appropriations to the institutions of higher learning follow: University of Georgia, $169,314; Georgia School of Technology, $187,500; State College of Agriculture, $275,250; Bowden State Normal and Industrial college, $20,000; Georgia Normal School (formerly First District A. and M. school), $40,000; Southern A. and M. college (formerly Second District A. and M. school), $40,000; district agricultural schools, $155,000; North Georgia Agricultural college, Dahlonega, $40,000; State Medical college, Augusta, $69,500; State Normal school, Athens, $110,000; State College for Women, Milledgeville, $147,500; State Woman's college, Valdosta, $60,000; Georgia Industrial and Normal School for Colored Youths, Savannah, and Georgia Industrial and Normal School for Colored Youths, Albany, $20,000; School of Agricultural and Mechanical Arts, Forsyth (for colored youths), $5,000.

The state as a unit is doing more for her common schools, on a basis of school population, than most states in the union. This is due to the system we employ which places the responsibility of common school maintenance upon the state. Most states place this responsibility upon the counties and municipalities and utilize a state appropriation only for purposes of equalization—that is, the bringing of all schools to a standard as to length of terms, teacher qualifications, curriculums, etc. Therefore, while Georgia as a commonwealth appropriates more to common schools than many other states, the sum total spent on common school education is not so great as in the majority of these same states. North Carolina appropriates from the state treasury, to illustrate, less than one-fourth the Georgia appropriation, but North Carolina, a smaller state, spends on her common school system a sum total of perhaps double what Georgia spends. North Carolina's state appropriation is for equalizing purposes, and in consequence North Carolina has not a crazy-quilt common school system with nine-month terms in one county and five-month terms in another, as in Georgia. Florida has practically the North Carolina system.

While the sum total for Georgia common schools is none too much—indeed too little, and improperly distributed—is it not heart-rending to find Georgia spending less than a million and a half dollars all told on her many higher institutions, which is less than any of her neighboring states spend upon their respective state universities alone? The list of appropriations to these institutions for this year, as here tabulated from the comptroller's report, is enough to make every Georgian, who has the future welfare of the boys and girls and of the state that must depend upon their ability to develop and carry-on, bow his or her head in shame.

The story in the figures tabulated from this report is enough to stimulate every citizen of this state to the importance of revising our educational system. And this in turn must come from the legislature. We need a legislature of broad-minded, far-visioned men of experience and vision, divorced from the petty political system that has been the outstanding menace of this state.

THE GEORGIA YAM.

The "Georgia yam" is getting an international reputation like the Georgia peach, or the Georgia watermelon, or Georgia cane syrup, or the Georgia pecan. The fact is, since we have learned to standardize—not as well as we should but with an encouraging beginning—the distinctive commodities that Georgia produces better than the average are bringing premium prices, and the Georgia affix is the cause of it. That fact is so well established now that the markets, especially among the small and irresponsible dealers, ought to be closely patrolled by the cooperative marketing organizations to see that consumers are not imposed upon by the offering of inferior products under the claim of Georgia grown. Just a few months ago to illustrate The Constitution was apprised of inferior hard shell pecans being sold in one of the larger middle western markets as "Georgia paper-shell pecans." We have been advised from time to time of small, inferior, stringy sweet potatoes being marketed as "Georgia yams." These "tricks of the trade" should be watched and enjoined, for Georgia is too jealous of the quality of her products to permit of such abuses in the markets.

The Georgia yam, at one time practically unmarketable, is finding a top-notch price in the American markets, and the people of the north and west are beginning to appreciate the marvelous food value of this product. It has found its proper place at last largely through the vigorous and intelligent efforts of the Georgians Sweet Potato exchange, which has until very recently had its general sales office in Chicago. It is now located in Atlanta.

The 1926 crop is now moving The last hamper of the 1925 crop was delivered to the Atlanta trade on June 30th. The first hamper of the 1926 crop was delivered on July 7th.

This is interesting when we remember that it has been only a very few years since the entire sweet potato crop of the south was dumped onto the markets during two fall months and only to nearby markets.

The marketing period extends now over the entire year and during the last two years southern yams have been shipped to forty-four of the forty-eight states and to three Canadian provinces.

The production for 1925 was below normal but it is interesting to note that the volume marketed was 25 per cent greater than from the previous crop. A more interesting fact is that markets were held fairly steady the entire season.

This development has been accomplished by the concentrated effort of a comparatively few growers employing modern marketing methods, closely related to cooperative marketing. The idea of such an organization was born in a south-wide meeting held in Atlanta in June, 1920. It has since become a national organization.

With the modern methods of storing, a national marketing organization, a twelve months marketing period, it would appear that the lowly yam has "arrived" at a point where it is a dependable source of revenue to those who give it fair treatment.

WARFIELD ENTHUSIASTIC.

S. Davies Warfield, president of the Seaboard Air Line, has just returned to Baltimore from a two weeks' inspection trip over his company's rails in the southeast. Upon his return he gave a statement of his observations to The Manufacturers' Record. Among other things he said:

"Entering Georgia, I do not know when I have seen such prospects of abundant crops in southern Georgia; on every side there is evidence of great agricultural prosperity. New people are coming into that country. The diversification of crops is marked and I hope it will spread not only throughout Georgia, but will reach down into Florida. It now reaches the Seaboard's river junction line and territory contiguous thereto. This whole country of northern Florida and that broad southern belt of Georgia shows wonderful activity and is responding not only to crop diversification, but improved farming methods and stock raising. New houses are going up, additions to houses and barns are being built, thrift is evident on all sides. I rode through farm after farm, and when you see on these farms tobacco in quantity and in fine condition, next to it corn, between the rows of corn rows of peanuts, cotton in the next field, watermelons in the next, vegetables, then the peach orchards, pecan groves, the dairy farms, hog and cattle raising, you begin to realize the tremendous advantages this section of our southern territory possesses."

Mr. Warfield attributes the great agricultural prosperity of south Georgia to crop diversification—that is, to the system of balancing the farm program, for which The Constitution has vigorously fought for years. It is the keynote of Georgia's agricultural success. Time was when we were dependent upon cotton as a money crop. Today cotton is just as much a money crop in income volume as ever it was, but in addition, peaches, pecans, apples, melons, cane, potatoes, vegetables, etc., are all being grown as money crops. And in addition, farmers are growing more feed and food crops than ever before, thereby "living at home" to a more marked degree than ever before.

The great responsibility upon the banks in rural communities, and upon business men generally, is to encourage the balanced crop program, and to cooperate with farmers in a continual bettering of their system of marketing. The rapid development of what Mr. Warfield calls "diversification" has to a large extent been made possible only by better marketing facilities, particularly as involving those products that we can grow so successfully but which, until within the past three or four years, had practically no facilities for reaching properly the outside consuming markets.

When the president goes a-fishing, think of the office-seekers who would gladly dig bait for him.

Always a rush to get back to the soil in summer weather, but the farmers fail to harness any one to it.

Vacation time is anything but a joke to a home-hiking congressman.

Stump oratory is not as popular now as certain other things that bear the stump brand.

Perhaps the reason we don't hear anything of the reformer who reformed himself, is due to the fact that he's too modest to talk about it.

Just think of the work an off-duty congressman has to do running around the country explaining why he didn't!

In some sections July 4 was so sane it didn't know itself.

IN MOON-DARK

BY FRANK L. STANTON

I.

Pray you not that the Night come soon,—
There are Ghosts in the Dark o' the Moon!
Though the music be keyed to a dancing tune
There are Ghosts in the Dark o' the Moon!
They glide from the shadows
And converse hold
O'er lost heart-treasure
And buried gold,—
O'er the dreams of Youth
And of men grown old,—
There are Ghosts in the Dark o' the Moon!

II.

Ever they rise from their sleep so long—
Ghosts in the Dark o' the Moon!
Is the Night Wind chanting an old love song
To Ghosts in the Dark o' the Moon?
O You, of the great eyes
And golden hair,
And the kiss I would die for—
The Cross I would bear,
Leave me not till the last Night,
All loveless, draws near,—
There are Ghosts in the Dark o' the Moon!

LOOKING AND LISTENING

BY SAM W. SMALL.

The Two-Thirds Rule.

Several interested readers have asked for information about the two-thirds rule for making nominations in democratic national conventions. They want to know when and why it was adopted and how it has worked in practice?

The rule really grew out of the feud between President Jackson and Vice President Calhoun. Jackson had promised that he would hold the office for only one term and Calhoun had expected to succeed thereto. But when he found that Jackson was figuring to succeed himself, Calhoun broke with the president. Jackson and Calhoun in 1828 had presented a sectional ticket, both being southern men, the one from Tennessee and the other from South Carolina. Jackson desired a northern democrat to run with himself in 1832 in order to hold what strength his administration had in that region. Therefore, because Calhoun as vice president had cast the deciding vote against confirming Martin Van Buren as minister to England, picked the latter to be his running mate.

The Reason for the Rule.

For the first time, in 1832, nominations were to be made by all parties in national conventions, instead of by congressional caucuses or nominations put forth by state legislatures.

The democratic convention was held in Baltimore May 21, 1832, and was the real christening of the "democratic party." The combination had previously been variously known as Jeffersonian, democratic-republican, Adams men and Jackson men.

Prior to the assembling of the convention the Virginia and Kentucky democrats were each seeking to name the candidate for the vice presidency. Jackson realized that a combination was possible to give a majority for some candidate not wholly to his liking. He calculated carefully and devised a plan of nomination that he believed would produce a Van Buren victory.

What the Rule Required.

When the convention met the Jackson men were in the majority strongly and adopted the following rule:

"Resolved, That each state be entitled, in the nomination to be made for the vice presidency, to a number of votes equal to the number to which they will be entitled in the electoral college, under the new apportionment, in voting for president and vice president; and that two-thirds of the whole number of the votes in the convention shall be necessary to constitute a choice."

The 24 states were thus entitled to 288 votes in the convention, but Missouri with 4 votes was not represented. Two-thirds of the 288 were 192, and in the ballot Van Buren got 208, Barbour, of Virginia, got 49 and Johnson, of Kentucky, got 26—a total of 283 and one vote missing.

Thus Jackson won his preference and the rule, with sporadic objections, was adopted by subsequent conventions to the present time.

Its Hottest Ordeal.

The hottest fight that was made against it was in the convention at Baltimore in 1844. The chief contenders there for the presidential nomination were Van Buren and General Lewis Cass, of Michigan. Van Buren had been elected president in 1836 and was seeking another term after having been beaten by General Harrison, the whig candidate, in 1840. The friends of neither Van Buren nor Cass could figure out a possible two-thirds vote for either, but the Cass men were not willing to see Van Buren nominated by a majority vote. The consequence was that the convention carried on an excited battle for a day and a half before it decided to abide by the two-thirds rule. Then it balloted nine times before a nomination was made.

Here Enters the Dark Horse.

It was this convention that went out into "the sticks" and brought in the now well-known "dark horse." On the eighth ballot Van Buren had fallen from his initial 146 to 104 and Cass had grown from his 83 to 114. The Johnson, of Kentucky, and Buchanan, of Pennsylvania, men dropped them and, combining with some tired Cass men, voted 44 for James K. Polk, of Tennessee, who had been governor of his state and speaker of the national house of representatives. On the next ballot the vote for Polk was unanimous. The result was a great surprise to the whole country, but that wonderment was tremendously increased when in the November election Polk beat towering Henry Clay, getting 170 electoral votes to 105 for the famous Kentuckian.

In that election Georgia "went democratic" again after having given her electoral vote in 1836 to my great-uncle, Hugh Lawson White, of Tennessee, and then in 1840 to General William Henry Harrison, the successful whig candidate.

How the Rule Works.

It is notorious that the rule gives any compact minority over one-third the power to prevent the nomination of a candidate who may have a pronounced majority of the delegates in his train. It is the deus ex machina that deals the joker to the dark horse.

It did that in 1852 when it rung in Franklin Pierce, the darkest sort of a New Hampshire horse, on the 40th ballot and nominated him almost unanimously over Cass on the 49th roll call.

It beat Stephen A. Douglas and split the party at Charleston in 1860; ruined Hancock and Hendricks by forcing the nomination of Seymour in 1868, when the nomination of either of them would most probably have caused the defeat of General Grant.

Again in 1912 at Baltimore the rule destroyed the chance of Champ Clark and produced the nomination of Woodrow Wilson; and in 1924 it baffled McAdoo and Al Smith and brought John W. Davis from the rear to the front.

On the record of past elections for 30 years, should the rule be set aside in 1928, it is now possible for states that always go republican to send in a majority of delegates and nominate candidates for the democratic states to elect.

But would that be truly democratic?

Chesapeake Bay

America's Magnified Venice

Agitation to save Fort Hunt and Fort Washington as historic sites, and also the recent trip of President Coolidge to Williamsburg, Va., in the Mayflower, turned attention to the lower Potomac an historic region which seldom makes any considerable ripple in the world's news, says a bulletin from the Washington, D. C., headquarters of the National Geographic Society.

"School histories tell how tobacco planters of colonial Virginia depended on rivers for transportation; and, in 1926, the lower Potomac and Chesapeake bay country still is in the river transportation stage.

"Representative of the numerous tiny steamers that carry both passengers and freight in this region is one line which plies from Washington to Baltimore. It makes a trip 260 miles by water in 63 hours, which can be covered in 45 minutes on a railroad train.

Salute to Mount Vernon.

"The standard bay steamer is a screw-propelled boat 100 to 150 feet long. It carries one or two decks of cabins and draws from 8 to 12 feet of water.

"On its leisurely way down the Potomac on the way to Baltimore, the steamer touches history nearly every time it puts in at a landing in Maryland or Virginia. Soon after leaving Alexandria where General Braddock landed on his way to meet the French and defeat near Pittsburgh, the steamer passes under the guns of Fort Hunt and Fort Washington. Then the passengers hear the whistle blast the traditional salute to stately Mount Vernon. Across the river is Marshall Hall and Gunston Cove, is brown brick Gunston Hall, manor of Washington's close friend, George Mason. Port Tobacco cannot be reached. Its creek is silted up. But Colonial Beach, once the private landing of 'Light Horse Harry' Lee, awaits the steamer. Colonial Beach is now a summer resort for capital residents. Wakefiled, birthplace of George Washington, is within sight from the steamer lane. This site and monument will soon receive more attention from Americans for the government has recently authorized the building of a good road to the main pike.

Visits Made in Motor Boats.

"The dependence of this historic Virginia shore on water transport is typical of the whole Chesapeake Bay country. Northern Neck is the birthplace of presidents and statesmen. From Northern Neck came George Washington, James Monroe, Robert E. Lee, Thomas Lightfoot Lee and Richard Henry Lee, and the father of John Marshal. Near the edge of it was born James Madison. Northern Neck today is much the same Northern Neck that those famous Americans knew, each in his day. The railroad whistle has never blasted the peaceful quiet of the country side.

Prohibition as a Political Issue

BY MARK SULLIVAN.

Washington, July 10.—(Special.) In some northern and eastern sections of the United States—the particular sections described by a witness at the prohibition hearings in an intricate pun as "more wet but less aqueous, more thirsty but less dry"—there is an argument which runs thus:

The south helped—was, in fact, a leader—in putting the eighteenth amendment into the constitution and keeping it there. Some of the rest of the country—use New Jersey as an example—does not like the eighteenth amendment and proposes to avoid being bound by it, if possible. Several of the referenda proposed in wet states look to giving each state the right to put its own interpretation on what constitutes an "intoxicating beverage." Therefore, this argument says, if the south insists on complete, nation-wide observance of the eighteenth amendment, New Jersey should insist on the complete, nation-wide observance of the fourteenth amendment. (The fourteenth amendment is the one guaranteeing to the negro his right to vote; the one which the north inserted in the constitution in the spirit of a conqueror after the civil war.)

Stated another way, the argument is to the effect that if the south insists that New Jersey live up to the eighteenth amendment as interpreted by congress, New Jersey will join with other wet communities in insisting that the south live up to the fourteenth amendment. Put yet more specifically, the argument is that if the manufacture and sale of liquor is to be forbidden in New Jersey, the negro shall vote in the south. This argument occasionally goes so far as to propose that the wets shall unite in a movement to stir up the negro in the south tor vote in large numbers. In this last form the argument appears again and again in a Washington, D. C., newspaper and among wet exponents elsewhere.

There is a basic fallacy in the argument, as will be explained in a moment; but if there were not, this is a fairly disturbing proposal to add to the other elements which now work rather seriously against the tranquility of the United States and the amity of its people toward each other. A movement financed, directed and stimulated from northern cities to cause the negroes in the south to vote in large numbers would be a second installment of that original tragic episode when the north granted suffrage to the newly enfranchised slaves who were a majority in many southern states; tried to enforce that suffrage with arms, and actually, in some states, for some years, maintained a non-white government.

The granting of suffrage to the negroes within five years after they had been slaves and under all the circumstances, is now held to be a mistake by many leaders of thought in the north. Many believe it who do not say it, and some say it. So conspicuous a person as Senator Borah said it the other day, and Senator Borah has the largest personal following of any man now in American public life. In the judgment of many Borah comes nearer to being entitled to be called "great," in the older political sense of that word, than any other man in the senate. Borah's willingness to say that he regards the passage of the fourteenth amendment, at the time it was passed, as having been a mistake, is part of his bigness. (Incidentally, that utterance gives occasion for some explanation from persons who say that Borah is a candidate for the republican nomination for the presidency. If a man were really a republican candidate for the presidency; if the thought of the presidency lay at the root of his public utterances and accompanied them, about the last thing he would do would be to take a position likely to cause him the loss of the negro vote in some of those northern cities, like Indianapolis and Cincinnati, on which the republican party depends to win its presidential campaigns.)

But Borah's position goes further than saying that the passage of the fourteenth amendment, at the time it was passed, was a mistake. The facts go further than that. Borah made the point that the fourteenth amendment is not disobeyed in the south. That is the fact. There is not now any law on any southern statute book which fails to conform to the constitution. Every one of the existing state laws in the south affecting suffrage that has been submitted to the supreme court of the United States on a question of constitutionality has been held constitutional. The last of these test cases came from Alabama; and one of the justices of the supreme court of the United States who declared the law constitutional was a man who had himself fought in the Justice Oliver Windell Holmes. The northern army in the civil war and had been rather gravely wounded, south has now no laws which conflict with the federal constitution, and is indulging in no talk about referenda or other gestures aiming to limit, or qualify, or neutralize the effect of the federal constitution in its states—in the sense that some wet states are proposing to qualify or limit the application of the eighteenth amendment to them.

One ought not to make this assertion without adding that the negro in the south does not vote in large numbers at general elections. But the reason he does not vote is not concerned with the federal constitution. This point was covered recently in a dispatch sent from the south to The Baltimore Sun by Frank R. Kent, from which the following sentences are taken:

"There is . . . no restriction whatever upon the right of registration or the high privilege of voting applying to the negro that does not also apply to the white man. In the . . . primaries, it is true . . . that the state laws do restrict participation to the whites, but so far as the general election and registration are concerned there is not a word on the statute books of a discriminatory nature. Nor is there any unfairness toward the blacks in the administration of the laws. Negroes who apply for registration are treated exactly as are the whites. As a matter of fact, there are in all southern states many negroes who regularly register and vote. If more of them do not, it is either because they lack interest or cannot meet the tests that apply to all. In other words, it is their own fault. . . .

"(Southerners) very frankly avow the real situation. They will tell the world that if it were necessary to discriminate in order to eliminate the negro from politics they would most certainly discriminate. If only unfair means would deprive him of the vote they would be used. . . . In the past, perhaps, it is stated, there may have been discrimination against the negro, but that time has gone. There is no discrimination now because none is necessary. The negro in the south, with rare exceptions, has accepted the situation . . . he has lost all interest in politics. The futility of the thing, so far as he is concerned, is well understood. He has abandoned the habit of political thought and no longer makes an effort to register. Apparently he has acquiesced in the theory that government in the south is a matter to be administered by whites. That is about the situation. It is no longer necessary to have discriminatory election laws in the south. And it is undoubtedly true, as they tell you in these states, that there is today no test that applies to the negro that does not also apply to the white man . . . there are in these states simple educational qualifications and a small poll tax, both of which are features of the election laws in various northern and western states. Obviously there is no legal bar raised against the negro, except in the primary. There is apparently no reason why the negro should not register under these southern laws today just as easily and freely as the white man. And there would not be any discirimination against him either unless he tries too numerously to do so."

What Mr. Kent says in those sentences is what Senator Borah had in mind. In all the southern states the election laws and other laws conform to the federal constitution. There is no attempt by local state laws to deny or limit the application of the federal constitution; or to assert the right of a state to put its own interpretation upon a portion of the federal constitution. The suggestion that a northern state like New Jersey, using that state merely as an illustration, should retaliate on the south for its support of the eighteenth amendment by calling for the enforcement of the fourteenth amendment in the southern states themselves has no point. To be sure, it would be possible for any wet organization, for wet motives or any motives whatever, to try to stir up the southern negroes to vote in larger numbers than now do so. That would make some trouble and would add one more item to the aggregate of local irritations which now composes about all there is of national politics in the United States. But it wouldn't change anything. And if any persons or organizations try it they won't gain any friends for their own cause.

Some thoughtful persons believe that prohibition is going to become a question of the sanctity of the federal constitution and that as such it will overshadow all other political issues to the extent that the constitutional aspects of slavery overshadowed everything else in American politics for 115 years.

If that should come to pass it would be the pity of pities. Few persons in the present generation understand the incubus to American development that was inherent in our preoccupation with the political and constitutional aspects of slavery. I said those slavery questions lasted for 115 years, meaning from the beginning of the country until 1890. Many assume that the politics arising out of slavery ended when slavery itself did, with the closing of the civil war. That is not true. Some of the greatest of our troubles arising out of slavery were those that came in the period from the end of the civil war until about 1890. So long as the rancours aroused by the civil war lasted the political evils of slavery lasted. As late as 1887 an official in Grover Cleveland's administration undertook to give back to the southern states battle flags which had been taken from them in the civil war. Thereupon in its contention of that year the Grand Army of the Republic, which was, on the whole, the most potent political organization in the north, stopped its march at a banner containing the name of the president of the United States and walked around it. Cleveland, having accepted an invitation to speak at St. Louis, received so many threats that for the sake of the dignity of his office he felt obliged to withdraw his acceptance. The unhappiness of the 25 years following the civil war was as great as that of any period preceding the war. The spirit characterizing the north's treatment of the conquered south was one of the most unfortunate aspects of our whole history.

Incidentally, one might speculate on an interesting analogy: While the civil war was at its height President Lincoln publicly preached "malice toward none; charity toward all." If Lincoln had lived on after the civil war he would have tried to practice charity toward the south. If he had done that would not the north have turned against him and cried him down? Was not Lincoln, on the whole, fortunate to have died within ten days of the ending of the civil war?

The other aspect of the analogy is this: During the great war President Wilson preached peace without victory, and later a doctrine of no malice toward anybody except the kaiser, and of charity toward the Germans, if they would get rid of their kaiser, and toward all other democracies. When the war ended and Wilson tried to live up to the spirit of his utterances he was cried down and spent five unhappy years until he died. If Wilson's death had happened to come to him at the same time, relatively, as Lincoln's, that is, within ten days after the armistice, he would have died at the point of his highest exaltation.

There is much to reflect about in this comparison. In all wars people are worked into passion, and at the end of them are indisposed to follow leaders who propose charity.

It was not until about 1890 that America really got rid of the incubus of slavery. During all that early portion of our history our entire equipment of statesmanship was consumed in meeting problems associated with slavery. Not until after 1890 was it really possible for us to see what we could do with the operation of a democracy.

Not only as respects politics and statesmanship was slavery and the aftermath of slavery an incubus. Preoccupation with it prevented us from flowering as the nation might have flowered in other respects, political, spiritual and material. The thirty-five years since 1890 have seen infinitely greater accomplishment than all the years before. There was no American drama until 1890. There had been some American poetry, but the only conspicuous American novel before 1890 was one that dealt with slavery, "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Eighteen hundred and ninety was about the beginning of America's flowering in the drama, in fiction and in most of the arts. About the same time was the beginning of our best period of material development.

If we are to have several years of running constitutional debate about prohibition analogous to the one about slavery the leader of one side of it is already in position. The Webster of this day will be Senator Borah.

SUNDAY HEALTH TALKS

BY WM. BRADY, M. D.

THE CURE OF THE CULT HABIT.

A shrewd young man engaged as advertising manager for a department store saw the light, quit his job, and started in the business of marketing "health food." His food preparation is not half bad, as a food, but, believe the young man, it is the salvation of the world, the one way the people can escape cancer, tuberculosis et cetera. This young man now has agents or house-to-house canvassers in most towns, and they have a wonderful line of lingo which impresses the sapient layman. Then the young man distributes a pretentious advertising medium which looks something like a magazine, and through this medium he intrigues a good many saps. Finally he goes out regularly on the lecture circuit, and by introducing himself to the local board of education or some such representative body of sapient citizens he gets the use of the public school auditorium or a Y. M. C. A. hall or other public building for his "lecture." For such occasions he purports to be the president of an impressive organization having a name something like "National Nutrition association"—of course, there is no such public of official organization, but the sapient citizens fall for it and permit the young man to put over his "lecture." This scheme seems to bring a good many new customers for the amazing food preparation. All in all, it is a great game, and a lad with ambition and no scruple is a fool to putter around with honest advertising when the grand ill public is so fond of the other kind.

The Food's the Thing.

Although the medicine business has been pretty thoroughly worked over, from every concievable angle, there is still a certain steady demand for old established nostrums, for there is still a constant birth rate of the class of people whose pictures get into the papers in connection with testimonials or accidents. Certain of the old-time nostrums are still manufactured and sold, but business "ain't what she used to be," except the lines which are sufficiently alcoholic to give a gentle jag. In the past twenty years some very pretentious new nostrums have been launched, some of them with advertising campaigns that cost huge fortunes, but today not one of these news ones remains—they have all faded from memory within the space of a few short years. I could name the familiar ones, but why remind the victims of a painful experience?

Popular credulity and gullibility in respect to medicines was simply exploited to death by the greed of the patent medicine barons, now the aristocracy of our fair land. The blood-purifying, germ-destroying, nerve-regenerating, manhood-restoring, stomach building panacea was a washout, and the sap who paid over his loose change for it is downright sore about "pills and potions." Not at all suspicious of the quack business in general, just disappointed in the effect of the medicine, which seemed to work miracles only in the faked testimonials. The sapient sap is by no means unresponsive to appeals to his puerile credulity concerning food. Witness the huge success of the "health food" business.

One of the tricks of the fake "food specialist" which seems to appeal to a good many sapient sapheads (these are English words which any good dictionary will define, but I should prefer to call 'em Wisenheimers), is the warning of customers against various food combinations which, if one takes the mail-order "specialist" seriously acquire an injurious or poisonous character when eaten together or in the same meal. In a bit of "advice" given by mail to one Wisenheimer who wrote to a magazine which is conducted by and for all kinds of nonmedical quacks, even bread and meat at the same meal is interdicted. The poor sap must shy off from a sandwich, lest the ham react with the roll to produce a deadly poison!

Now, I ask you, even if you are a veritable boob about physiology, doesn't that seem absurd on its face?

Another dreadful combination interdicted by this eminent exponent of fishical cult-sure is sugar or starchy material with orange, lemon or grapefruit. Too bad that nature put sugar in the orange before these modern charlatans arrived on the scene.

The Youngish Fancy.

Nearly every day there are some inquiries from young persons, chiefly boys in their late teens, but some from girls of the same age, about the various "courses" hawked by practitioners of so-called physical culture. The big muscle merchants seem to appeal strongly to callow youth. Often these confiding young persons send along with their inquiries the blank forms which they fill out when purchasing the hokum the physical cultists sell by mail, and Old Doctor Kidd in his palmiest days never concocted a more useful symptom blank. The young sap gives the mail-order charlatan all the data such merchants need and the information, besides enabling the shrewd faker to "tell him how he is handled" is also valuable to the faker as marketable material, for it is the practice of these crooks to sell sucker lists to one another.

Naturally the youthful fancy turns toward thoughts of what one notorious fishical cultist calls "superb manhood" and "perfect manhood." Naturally a boys wants to be strong, physically vigorous and all that. Naturally a girl wants to be graceful, beautiful. It is deplorable, indeed, if in the pursuit of these desirable objects the boy or girl should be exploited by these disreputable merchants who ply their trade wholly through the agency of a nasty class of claptrap magazines.

Better Instruction Needed.

Of course, all this gullibility of the well misinformed laity in respect to the systems, methods or courses sold by the plausible cultists is due to the fundamental ignorance of the laity in the field of physiology and hygiene. The cultists who profit handsomely on such ignorance lend their influence, which is very considerable, to every movement which opposes or impedes the establishment of physiology and hygiene as subjects of serious instruction in the common schools.

No teacher of mathematics, English, spelling, Latin or geography has ever asked me to outline a course of instruction for eighth grade pupils in such subject. But a good many teachers of what is humorously called physiology and hygiene have sought such help or guidance from me. I can't outline such a course, without personal acquaintance with the pupils and their needs. But this goes to show what an outright farce the teaching of physiology and hygiene in the common schools is—the teacher is not even expected to understand what he or she is trying to teach.

The mere loss in money from dealing with these non-medical quacks and faddists who hold forth in the pages of the disreputable physical culture periodicals is an insignificant trifle. The injury of the youth's moral fibre by the false assurances, which of course cannot be carried out, is the serious part of it. By contrast with that, think what an excellent effect the same amount of study, interest, enthusiasm and effort would have if the young person were honestly and intelligently directed. Then when you find your children manifesting too much interest in the claptrap magazines which introduce to them all these shady cultists and their humbug systems, cut down the allowance which is squandered on such junk and place in the young people's hands some clean health magazine, such as Hygeia. Let 'em submit their personal questions or problems to the beauty department of that magazine. Let 'em ask the inquiry department about any of the big muscle cults or other plausible short-cut systems. They'll get the plain truth.

A Word Meaning Prescribe.

I am greatly troubled at times with ———. Will you kindly suggest treatment? (Composite of many requests.)

Answer—This is a column or department dealing with health and hygiene. I am glad to give any information or advice I can about keeping well. I do not give any information or advice about the diagnosis or treatment of individual cases. This is not a medical department. I cannot send a prescription nor can I "suggest" treatment or a remedy for any individual case. For such service consult a physician.

Just Soap.

My sister contends that ——— soap is worth more because it has valuable antiseptic action and so protects against many diseases. We have always preferred ——— soap for household toilet use. Has ——— soap really the virtues my sister ascribes to it? (Mrs. L. B.)

Answer—No. Your sister is too credulous or perhaps not sufficiently discriminating about her reading. One brand of soap is as good as another so far as antiseptic action or preventing disease is concerned.

Nosebleed.

Son, 15, subject frequent profuse bleeding from nose. Doctor has repeatedly packed nostrils with gauze to control it. Doctor says it is common in boys of that age and he will no doubt outgrow it. (G. L.)

Answer—Nose bleed is not uncommon in persons of any age. But it is by no means normal or natural and when the hemorrhage requires such emergency treatment it is time to investigate. A nose and throat physician could probably find the source of the bleeding and correct the trouble.

Mail Order Quackery.

Much is written nowadays about proper combinations of foods and the tendency of wrong combinations to conduce to mucus which seems to be the foundation of most of our infection today. (Mrs. S. A. E.)

Answer—That is all hokum propagated by plausible long-distance "food specialists" and the like for the purpose of separating half-baked people from their loose money. The only rule about the combination of foods is to select whatever combination suits your taste. "Mucus" has nothing whatever to do with disease.

Flop Anywhere.

Friend and I going on hike in August. Mother says we are likely to get tuberculosis from sleeping on the ground. (W. E.)

Answer—Mother is wrong. No disease is caused by sleeping on the ground.

LIGHTS OF PARIS

BY PIERRE VAN PAASSEN

MONTMARTRE'S MAIN STEM.

It is conservatively estimated that Americans spend each night in the neighborhood of three million francs along the lurid main stem of Montmartre, and even the Parisians admit that this influx of filthy gold helps to make the district one of the gayest spots on earth.

Midnight is the magic hour when the invasion of Americans reaches its high water mark, when the more sedate restaurants and clubs in the town start to close their doors and when the river of revelers turns in its course and streams in the direction of Montmartre.

The French have an inordinate liking for red flaring electric signs and Montmartre simply screams with them. They proclaim the presence of Elsie Janis, Maurice the Dancer, and Valentino's illuminated sheik face gleams from the top of the Gaumont Palace, the biggest cinema emporium in France. Not a seat is vacant in the sidewalk cafes. Constant new streams of automobiles discharge night owls and their feminine consorts. Here is a jazz orchestra gone half mad running out on the sidewalk. There an accordion player without coat or collar who, in a daze probably induced by the sublimity of his art, runs right into a smart cafe and is received with loud huzzahs to the chagrin and humiliation of the orchestra playing there.

One cafe has a band of gypsy entertainers. The gypsies talk Brooklynese among themselves. The waiters are Czecho-Slovaks. It says so on the menu. One of them who comes to my table confides he was born and bred in Wilmington, Del., and his ancestor fought under Washington in the revolution.

One big restaurant flares forth a purple sign: "In the Dead Rat," a competitor across the way goes one better and has a sign flickering above the roof saying: "In the Rat That Is Not Dead."

The tiny theater next to the Moulin Rouge announces that it is "The Theater of Ten O'Clock." The performance starts at midnight. There are by actual count one hundred seats and the lineup outside, also by actual count, runs to eight hundred or a thousand every night.

Talk about wild bolsheviks. They haven't got anything in Russia to compare with some of the boys who hold forth in the backrooms of the cafes here. They would ruin heaven if they could throw a torch amid the celestial mansions.

Outside the stream of humanity goes on unabated. Four o'clock in the morning when daylight begins to peep through is about the first sign of decline in activities. And ladies of the evening! Not pairs, but dozens, battalions, armies, legions of them.

One sees African dignitaries and Hindus with turbans. One hears Dutch spoken and gutteral high German. Soldiers of the foreign legion and foreign diplomats. The most disreputable females in the world and women that look as if they stepped out of glass cases.

There are cocaine sniffers and guides who will take you to opium joints; others will lead you to the most fantastic orgies. Some call it Babylon the Modern; a better name would be Gomorrah.

Glimpses of Hollywood

BY ROSALIND SHAFFER.

Hollywood, Calif., July 10.—(Special Correspondence.)—A hot, dusty road in the environs of Los Angeles out toward Lankershim was the locale chosen by a group of famous ones on Friday afternoon to make outdoor shots for "The Fourth Commandment."

Belle Bennett, the star of "Stella Dallas," who is playing the leading role in this picture, looked very fetching in spite of the hot and thick road dust in a snappy outfit of 14 years ago. A form-fitting, straight-front, brown princess dress well down to the ankles was decorated with a gold shoulder watch in the manner popular in 1912, and was topped off with a Tam-o-Shanter of vari-colored silk.

Fear and distrust gleamed in her eyes while Belle was climbing into an antique model of a popular make of car which was being chauffeured with only mediocre results by Henry Victor, who is her leading man.

The car, according to the property man, was rented with some difficulty from its owner, who has owned the thing for 15 years and who regards it as the apple of his eye. It was decorated with large and highly polished brass lamps, a broad shining brass band topped the front of the radiator and each door was carefully margined with a tiny brass line.

The engine, alas, was managed by a trick gear which proved recalcitrant to a marked degree every time Victor tried to drive it over the curb onto the drive with the grand flourish required by the story.

When the shot finally had been made successfully Victor and Miss Bennett dismounted from the chariot and went to the rear of the house to watch the predicament of Mary Carr.

Mary, who is playing the neglected mother of the two ungrateful children in this "Honor Try Father and Thy Mother" story, was having considerable of an argument with a garden hose. A sprayer was lying in the line of march as mother hangs the clothes on the line. Just as she steps over the sprinkler the grandson turns on the hose and Mary gets treated to an inverted shower bath, which blows her skirts over her head and drenches her to the waist.

Mrs. Carr was very game and allowed the gag to be repeated three times until the picture was taken successfully. A roll in blankets and a quick trip home folowed the third drenching. As she was getting into her car the old lady from whom the ranch house was being rented for the making of the picture expressed considerable concern over Mrs. Carr.

"You poor old soul," said the 70-year-old to Mrs. Carr with the air of protecting one still older and feebler, "how do you bear up under such treatment?"

This furnished Mrs. Carr with a laugh. Mary Carr is far younger than the commisserating onlooker thought. But one never would have guessed it from her makeup.

Henry Victor, playing with Miss Bennett in the picture, is an English actor of note. This is his first big part in Hollywood. Miss Bennett declares he will be a sensation.

Victor played in several foreign-made films, in one as leading man for Alice Delysia. Hollywood is getting quite excited over his tall and handsome English carriage, his perfect blonde marcel and athletic build, just as they did out here two years ago when Ronald Colman, another Briton, came here for his first picture in the West Coast studios.

Belle Bennett at the time of her sensational hit in "Stella Dallas" was advertised as the mother of a 16-year-old boy who, it was said, had been instructed to pass himself off as her brother instead of son.

"Many sob writers wrote me up as the price a mother had to pay for a career," Belle said. "It was a lot of bunk cooked up for press agent purposes by somebody else while I was absent in New York and made the death of my boy exceptionally painful."

One of her dead son's little chums, Wendell Philips Franklin, is playing the grandchild, Belle's son, in the picture they are now making. That is all Belle has left of her boy now, her present flicker of motherhood on the screen and an adopted child who grew up with the dead lad. The dead son was her only child.

Tuesday night at the Coconut Grove gave onlookers kinked necks at the sight of Rudolph Valentino and Pola Negri together in a box in a party which also included Agnes Ayres and her husband, Manuel Reachi, and Kathlyn Williams and her husband, Charles Eyton.

Pola had her raven locks wrapped in a deep blue turban and wore a very low cut black gown. Kathlyn wore white with iridescent beads. Agnes Ayres was swathed in a black and gold wrap with a high chinchilla collar. Just where Pola and Rudy now stand in heart interest is a matter on which the couple keep Hollywood constantly changing tacks. For the last month or so after the party at which Pola is said to have slapped Rudy the sheik seemed deeply interested in Greta Garbo.

Jerry Miley and Billie Dove were together on the Coconut Grove dance floor for every number. Billie lovely in a white chiffon beaded in a red and white flower design, the gown snug in the bodice and full in the skirt as the popular dresses often are cut here. Anna Q. Nilsson, footloose now that she is divorced from her shoe merchant husband, appeared in a party of four, Anna wearing a straight line green chiffon gown beaded in crystal and silver.

Phil Rosen, recently rumored as Mae Murray's next choice until Mae up and got a marriage license with some one else, was at a table with his mother.

Old Dobbin and the one hoss shay are sinking so fast into the limbo of forgotten things that Universal films has in a fit of panic run all about the country and gathered up what they call "twenty-two rare specimens of horse-drawn vehicles" to be filed in their museum of properties against the day when they may be needed for use in some future picture.

Further business transacted this week reveals the sale of ten lions, two tigers and six monkeys, all bred in the zoo at Universal City, and an enumeration of the chickens on the famous Laemmle chicken ranch there shows a population of 35,000 chickens resulting from the spring hatching. Any day that Laemmle gives up making pictures the statisticians here figure he can live 130 years longer on fried eggs.

Wednesday night at the Montmartre was given its high touch by the appearance of Jean Crawford wearing a large diamond solitaire on her proper finger. To all questioning Jean made no answer, but since the ring appears only shortly after Jean's announcing that she was not engaged to Michael Cudahy, grandson of the packer, it is generally accepted that she now is engaged to him.

Anna Q. Nilsson entertained a party of friends at dinner the same night, the guests including Anita Stewart, John Roche and Walter Pidgeon. The hostess wore white satin sewn with pearls.

David Divani, Mae Murray's newest matrimonial venture, first met Mae at a birthday party at Pola Negri's for Rudolph Valentino several weeks ago. The marriage license mentions David's age as 27 and Mae's as 33. Pola and Mae agree that Mr. Divani is a prince of the Georgian Caucasus, but at any rate Mr. Divani has taken a screen test and it is said that he will go into pictures.

The romance as told is quite touching. Mae fell and injured her hip at her new home in Santa Monica and after phoning Prince David to accompany her to the osteopath's the two started out. On the way David proposed and Mae accepted him and instead of winding up at the osteopath's the party went to the marriage license bureau.

Mae seems constitutionally incapable of staying out of matrimony though breakers ahead have sounded twice in her life before, once when she divorced Jay O'Brien and second when she divorced Bob Leonard in Paris last year as one of the incidents during a trip to the French capital for some new clothes. Prince David is a blond, rather Germanic looking.

Cameo Theater.

The drama of two lovers parted forms the keynote of the big dramatic sensation, "The Torrent," which plays at the Cameo on Wednesday and Thursday of this week. This story, which was written by the famous author of "The Four Horsemen of The Apocalypse," and other equally great stories, is the tale of two lovers of old Spain; soulmates if ever two humans were, separated through old-world traditions who meet when the fires of their passion had burned into them a longing for each other, and then the separation which marks the big punch in the picture.

The principal roles in the production are mostly capably handled by Richard Cortez and the next national beauty, Greta Garbo, who storms the audiences into complete surrender with her remarkable beauty and her magnificent ability as an actress.

Richard Barthelmess appears in "New Toys" at the Cameo on Monday and Tuesday, with his wife, Mary Hay, of Follies fame, playing opposite him.

"New Toys" is the story of two wild and wooly bright lights people who try to settle down and find their their pleasure in other ways, and find the longing to the night life too strong to hold them at home.

The picture is full of drama masked behind finely acted comedy and is entertaining all the way through.

The straight comedy attraction on the program for the week is "Red Hot Tires," which plays the theater on Friday and Saturday. This picture, which co-stars Monte Blue and Ruth Miller, is the story of a young man to whom something happened every time he saw "the girl," and the rip-roaring, hair-raising exploits he went into to win her.

Friends of Grover C. Willis will be pleased to learn that he has recently entered the services of Daniel Brothers company, 45 Peachtree street.

Mr. Willis for a number of years has been connected with the gent's furnishing trade of Atlanta. His most recent connection was with one of the foremost men's furnishing dealers of the middle west, and his new connection with Daniel Brothers company brings him home to his many friends.

Mr. Willis would certainly be pleased to have all of his friends and customers to call on him, and he would like for them to know that he is better situated now than ever before to give them the real service, quality merchandise and satisfaction that he has always rendered.

BANKS TO RETAIN EXCHANGE CHARGE

There is no probability that the Atlanta Clearing House association will follow the action of the New York clearing house and eliminate the present compulsory exchange and collection charges on out-of-town checks, it was stated by prominent Atlanta bankers on Friday.

"It is perhaps a misnomer to call the present rule a 'compulsory' matter," said one leading official of a bank, member of the Clearing House association. "It is really a voluntary agreement among all the local banks, to which all voluntarily subscribe. Technically any bank that wished to could withdraw from the agreement, but it is extremely improbable that any will."

"I don't believe a bank in Atlanta makes any money out of the exchange charges," said Robert F. Maddox, chairman of the board of the Atlanta & Lowry National bank. "While there might be, in theory, occasional cases where we might wish to abrogate the exchange or collection charge for a correspondent bank, such a case is extremely rare."

"The layman," continued Mr. Maddox, "does not understand the heavy expense involved in the collection of out-of-town items and I am certain, for one, that the cost to this bank is far higher than the total of its exchange and collection charges."

Mr. Maddox then explained how there is at all times a large sum known as "float," which consists of checks and other items in process of collection, which the bank can neither use nor secure interest for, although the depositors have the items immediately credited to their checking accounts, subject to their checks at once.

He cited the preceding day, when more than $7,000,000 of the day's deposits of the Atlanta & Lawry was shown to be unavailable to the bank, either being items sent to other cities for collection, or deposited with the Federal Reserve bank for collection on "deferred credit" basis.

Tudor Theater.

A dramatic story of the roaring rails of the west land, "Whispering Smith," comes to the Tudor the first half of the week, starring H. B. Warner.

"Whispering Smith" is the story of a gang of train wreckers in the Medicine Bend country, who practiced wrecking trains and looting them until the most feared man in all the west is put on their trail, one "Whispering Smith," quiet as a rattler and more dangerous, whose very name struck terror to the heartless outlaws who lived on murder and arson, and of the coming of the man who went in alone to the outlaw's hangout and got his man.

All the romance of the rails is combined with thrills of true western character in "Whispering Smith," the cast of which is one of the best ever selected for an outdoor picture. John Bowers, Lillian Rich and Lilyan Tashman, besides the star, H. B. Warner, playing in it.

On Thursday, Friday and Saturday the Tudor offers the story of a fighting fool called the "Scrapper Kid," because of his many battles for the love of it in "The Scrapper Kid," starring Art Acord.

The star of this picture is exemplary of the true western character, the kind that smiles in the face of death and in fun, rough and ready at all times for laughter or for fight, and his pictures are singularly free, interspersed with comedy and fast action.

KENTUCKY YOUTH HELD IN ROCHESTER ON CHECK CHARGE

Rochester, N. Y., July 10.—(AP)—Faultlessly attired, a debonair youth, who said he was James K. Hicks, alias J. M. Huey, 22, son of a prominent family of Union and Covington, Ky., was held here today while detectives traced a trail of alleged bad checks he is said to have left throughout the east.

He was arrested after purchasing $81 worth of clothing with worthless checks. A search of his hotel room revealed a stock of expensive clothing, ranging from ridin boots to imported Japanese kimonas. Check books on banks in Hartford, Conn., and Miami and St. Petersburg, Fla., were found in his possession.

He said his father was Samuel C. Hicks.

DISTRIBUTORS PLAN CONVENTION HERE

Annual convention of the Exclusive Distributors' Association of the United States will be held in Atlanta July 13 to 15, according to announcement by Fred Houser, of the Atlanta convention bureau.

Headquarters for the convention will be established in the Robert Fulton hotel and between 75 and 100 delegates from all parts of the country are expected. W. H. Steinbrenner, of Cincinnati, is president of the organization, and George Altman, of Columbus, Ohio, is secretary and treasurer. W. H. Willson and Edward B. Bridger, of Atlanta, are local representatives who will take a prominent part in welcoming the guests.

Exclusive distributors, according to Mr. Houser, are members of an advertising agency, specializing in individual service, with branches in every town of any size in the country.

Palace Theater.

Rod LaRocque in "Braveheart," playing Monday and Tuesday at the Palace theater in Inman Park leads off a week of outstanding attractions offered by the popular community playhouse. This stirring picture is a story of wigwam and campus life and depicts the noble sacrifice of an Indian chief for the honor of the white girl he loves. "Braveheart" is a play that will thrill the jaded theatergoer and will win the applause of those who appreciate a forceful love story.

James Oliver Curwood's "Ancient Highway," a story of the great north woods, comes to the Palace for Wednesday only, bringing with it a refreshing breath of the characteristic Curwood heroic romances. Jack Holt plays the part of Cliff Brant, the hero, and the part fits him to perfection, while Billie Dove gives him fine support in the role of Anntoinette St. Ives, the appealing little French-Canadian girl of the story.

Thursday and Friday brings the inimitable Lon Chaney to the Palace in one of his greatest character parts called "The Blackbird." Chaney in the role of the resourceful swindler and crook has done a splendid piece of acting in this play that all who appreciate the art of the screen will thrill to watch.

Closing the week on Saturday comes "The Enchanted Hill." This play is brand-new and taken from the most recent novel of Peter B. Kyne. It is a western special attraction with an atmosphere entirely different from the ordinary run of western thrillers. Romance of the highest order, coupled with plenty of action and a real plot make "The Enchanted Hill" a really fine moving picture.

Birthday Party Given to Youth Hopelessly Ill

If you were in the hospital and doctors couldn't see much chance of you getting out, how would you like it?

But if you were there and was surrounded by 10 or 12 pretty nurses with a fine birthday cake, peaches, cake, ice cream and one of the finest friends in the world, the situation would be slightly altered.

That is exactly the position Harold Burnett, 16-year-old boy of Liberty, S. C., found himself Saturday afternoon when his friend, Mrs. J. D. Hemming, of 112 Cypress street, gave him a birthday party.

Harold has been in Grady hospital for the past six months suffering from tuberculosis of the kidney. He left his home some time ago and since has been in financial straits.

He first went to Hapeville and later became ill and was taken to Grady hospital. Since he has been at the hospital, Mrs. Hemming, who does much work to bring sunshine to patients at the hospital, has taken an interest in him and has befriended him.

Saturday she obtained permission of Superintendent Steve R. Johnston to give him a birthday party.

"Anyway, it's a great life," Harold concluded, "whether you are in the hospital or at home—just so its your birthday."

Bedroom Farce On Howard Screen Stars Marie Prevost

It is generally admitted that the name of Al Christie on a feature picture is as indicative of a big laugh special as the same name on two-reel comedies years ago was indicative of a short but hilarious portion of a theater's program.

"Up in Mabel's Room" is the latest fun special from the studio of Mr. Christie. It opens at the greater Howard theater tomorrow and presents Marie Prevost in the stellar role of Mabel. She is supported by Harrison Ford and Phyllis Haver in featured in roles and a large cast, including Sylvia Breamer, Harry Myers, Paul Nicholson and Carl Gerard.

This farce about a chemise, the gift of a husband to his wife just before the two are divorced, follows a long line of comedy ancestors. "Charley's Aunt," a byword in every household for laughter, was one of the Christie hits. "Hold Your Breath," "Seven Days" and "Madam, Behave" are some of the others.

As in the case of "Charley's Aunt," "Seven Days" and "Madam, Behave," the basis for "Up in Mabel's Room" is a successful stage farce. Marie Prevost, one of the most piquant and popular of the younger stars, was obtained for the leading role of Mabel. In addition, a brilliant cast of supporting players was chosen for the parts of the husbands, wives, spinsters, bachelors and butlers, who are mixed up in the development of the plot and in the fun which follows.

In addition to its feature picture and other film numbers, the Howard is offering its patrons this week another Publix stage presentation produced by Frank Cambria, called "A Bird Fantasy." The stage setting represents a woodland bower and, with two exceptions, all the people on the stage represent birds. The range in variety from a gorgeous white peacock, with plumage of astounding proportions, to a flock of fluttering canaries. Outstanding performances are given by the well-known dancing team of Burnoff and Josephine, who portray "The Cat and the Canary;" Sybil Sanderson Fagan, whistler, who appears as "The Voice of the Canary;" Vivian Gonchar as the white peacock and Harriet Lundgren as the bird of paradise. Renee Rayne sings "Love Bird" before the curtain and highly appropriate incidental music also contributes materially to the all-around excellence of the performance.

Other numbers on the excellent program will include an overture by the Howard Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Joseph Littau; an organ specialty by Melvin P. Ogden, and

BIG REVUE SEEN AS LOEW HEADLINER

Comedy Is Feature of Remaining Acts on Bill.

All the latest Broadway songs and dances will be featured in "A New Revue on High," which will appear as the headline attraction on the new bill of vaudeville at Loew's Grand theater this week. Lee Rose and Kathryn Moon are the two stars of the act and they will be assisted by "The Eight Cylinders," with Grace Heath. The "cylinders" are pretty dancing girls and they have perfected many marvelous dances. Lee Rose and Kathryn Moon are two popular favorites of the musical comedy field and they have perfected an act this season which is perhaps the best of their career.

Gene Mason and Fay Cole, who also are well known and popular artists, will present their new comedy sketch, "Rain and Sunshine." The skit is full of clever jokes and songs.

One of the best story tellers in vaudeville is Bobb Van Horn, "The Professor of Laughology," who will present his new monologue, "Live, Love and Laugh," written by Andy Rice. Bobby Van Horn ranks as one of the best monologists on the stage.

Mays, Burt and Fenn, "The Three Jesters," will present a whirlwind comedy turn which has a minstrel feature of merit. They are singers and dancers as well as comedians and will offer a lively skit containing all new material.

The opening number on the bill will be "An Artists' Studio," presented by Lou and Genevieve Norvelles. This is an up-to-the-minute aerial novelty presented in a pretty scenic setting.

The summer vaudeville offerings on the Loew program maintain the general high standard of the Loew year-round bills. Special cooling systems keep Loew's Grand in a comfortable state of temperature no matter how high the thermometer may climb outside.

The world has been moving along at such a rapid pace htat few women now worry over the small boy who plays marbles for keeps.

'Top Hole' Features Many Local Girls In Sterling Cast

Introducing several new additions to the company, "Top Hole," the week's musical comedy production by Don Lanning and his Forsyth players at the Forsyth theater will undoubtedly set new records for the summer engagement, it is predicted by the management. The attractions of the offering are varied. In addition to its humor "Top Hole" has a number of memorable tunes and will feature specialty dancing by Emmett Merrill, a dancer who not only appears in numbers with the chorus but will be seen in several of his own dance creations.

Other new additions to the company include Miss Thelma Fraley, who comes here direct from a long stock engagement in St. Paul and who will be new leading lady. Several new dancers in the chorus will also be seen with the company for the first time. These include three local girls, Misses Ethel Duncan, Margaret Mooring and Janet Kelly.

Don Lanning will be seen in the part made famous at the Fulton theater by Ernest Glendenning and Fred Raymond will have one of the best comedy parts of his entire career.

"Top Hole" is something of a novelty among musical comedies in that it has a distinctive plot. In addition it is tuneful and catchy and during its long run at the Fulton theater in New York earned the sobriquet of the "tip top musical comedy." It deals with love and golf and tells an interesting story from first to last. Its lines sparkle with wit and humor and its comic situations, funny characterizations and rib-tickling "wise cracks" keep audiences in a continual state of hilarity.

Notwithstanding its varied assortment of attractions "Top Hole" has a simplicity that is very fetching and its action is plausible and at the same time gripping.

The central character is an irresponsible but thoroughly likable young man named Bob Corcoran, who incurs the anger of his father who sentences him to leave home for a year, seek work and pay back the $1,000 which the father had to pay as a result of one of Bob's escapades. Bob wins the money in a golf match and everything is nicely rounded out at the conclusion.

"You're in Love" is the most memorable of the song numbers, as it was the biggest hit of the play's season on Broadway, but there are a number of others that will ease their way into the musical appreciation of the audiences, among them "Every Silken Lady," and "Love Is a Sandman."

The same good scenic effects and costuming that has marked previous productions will be a feature of "Top Hole." The chorus will also be used to advantage in many of the song hits and all the principals of the company are provided parts that will insure a well rounded offering.

NEW MOVIE THEATER FOR LAKEWOOD PARK

Lakewood Amusement park's new five and ten cent motion picture theater will be in full operation this week as a new midseason feature, in addition to nightly dances in the casino, the full carnival panoply of thrilling and amusing midway attractions and a continuance of the policy of Wednesday afternoon "nickel matinees" for children, it was announced Saturday by Oscar Mills, secretary-manager.

Maurice de Garland's orchestra will play for dancing nightly beginning at 8 o'clock, with a straight admission price of ten cents per dance for pleasure seekers who are out for a variety of fun and will patronize the casino as only one of the score or more of attractions at the park. Dance lovers who want to spend the entire evening in the casino may secure nightly passes at $1 per couple. Admission to the casino will continue to be free to spectators.

were held earlier in the season. The terraced slope is ideally suited for thater use, two rows of seats on each step of the terrace giving clear view of the screen from all parts of the theater. The sides are inclosed in temporary walls.

Oscar Mills, secretary of the Southeastern Fair association, which operates Lakewood park, stated that the admission price of five and ten cents should not be accepted as a true valuation of the quality of entertainment to be offered. The fair association, in the interests of making the park as attractive to the public as possible, and of providing recreation at minimum cost, has relieved the movie concessionaire of much overhead and other expense that under ordinary operating conditions would run the admission price up to two or three times the scale fixed for the Lakewood theater. The difference in expense is all to be invested in higher quality of pictures. Programs are to be changed daily, with performances at 7 and 9 o'clock, the titles to be announced from day to day this week in the amusement advertising columns of the daily Constitution.

'SHUFFLIN' SAM' AT 81 THEATER

Despite the fact that there have been some extraordinarily good shows at the 81 theater the past few months, the company which has been engaged for the midnight frolic Friday night is without doubt the finest and best ever seen in Atlanta and also the foremost in America.

"Shufflin' Sam from Alabam'", with the renowned Nay brothers has been engaged by Manager Tom Bailey for the Friday night affair, and this company comes direct from a tour which included New York, Cincinnati, Dayton, Toledo, Columbus and other large cities of the east.

"Shufflin' Sam from Alabam'", is a howling success," says the Dayton Herald. "This show excels all other attractions seen here this season," says the Cincinnati Enquirer and hosts of other critics in as many papers join in acclaiming the virtues and the superiority of this show.

The story of "Shufflin' Sam from Alabam'", which is interwoven with the latest of musical numbers and marvelous dancing hits, tells of a ragged colored lad in the cotton fields of Alabam' whose ambition in life is to have plenty of good clothes, money and diamonds. The first scene is a prologue opening in the cotton fields where Sam is working as a cotton picker. He saves a few dollars and goes to the big races at Havana where the second scene is laid. On a yacht en route to Havana, he is a funny race track tout; finally he gets lucky and accumulates a fortune, from there he goes to New York, where he buys the best cabaret in the city and it is there we find him in the last act. All through the musical gem runs comedy of the highest brand and the last act, as the eastern dailies have termed it, is a Wow!

One of the best dancing choruses will be seen with this company. An outstanding feature of the show is the popular Memphis Blue Demons jazz orchestra, the best ever offered with a traveling attraction of this kind. Harry Nay will be seen in the principal character of Shufflin' Sam, and it is the greatest character he has ever portrayed, in all the years he has been on the stage.

A special engaged feature that is being offered with the show is the Charleston steppers who will present the very latest dance craze, now sweeping the country. The Charleston, which in itself is an attraction, is a marvelous piece of footwork.

Notwithstanding the prominence and the popularity of the "Shufflin' Sam from Alabam'" company, Manager Bailey announces that the tickets will be on sale at the usual prices. They may be had at either the theater or at Chess' Place at Five Points.

The royal coal commission's report has filled England with reverberations.

'A BIRD FANTASY' BY FRANK CAMBRIA ON HOWARD STAGE

Patrons of the Howard theater during the week starting tomorrow will be treated to a distinct novely in the form of "A Bird Fantasy," another contribution by Frank Cambria to the series of Publix stage presentations which are proving such popular features of the weekly programs. This stage number is further characterized as a woodland revel, the scene being laid in a delightfully realistic woodland bower, with a brilliant blue sky serving as a back ground for the ingenious scenic and lighting effects. The coustuming, too, is said to be most unique, for with the exception of a soloist who sings a brief introduction before the curtain and a character dancer who portrays a cat, all the characters on the stage represent birds. The company which appears in this production has been most carefully selected and includes Burnoff and Josephine, who will be seen in a clever dance portrayal of "The Cat and the Canary;" Sybil Sanderson Fagan, the celebrated whistler; Renee Rayne, prima donna soprano, and Vivian Gonchar, Harriet Lundgren, Julian Barashkova, Bernice Holmes, Mollie Milbrath and Marie Kay, dancers.

West End Theater,

Opening Monday with "Sally of the Sawdust," conceded by critics to be one of the best six pictures of the year, the West End theater program this week reads like a sheet from the program book of a New York theater. This great film, a masterpiece of superb acting and unexcelled in interest so far as plot goes, is followed by other fine motion pictures, which include "Sporting Life," "The Vanishing American," and others which carry a tremendous wallop so far as interesting the movie public is concerned.

In addition to "Sally of the Sawdust," patrons will find that "Sporting Life" is one of the keenest films of its kind ever shown here, showing a series of thrilling features in sports events, including a bout with "Ted" Lewis, boxing champion, back-stage shots of a musical comedy, and other interesting sidelights of sporting life. "Sporting Life" will be shown as Wednesday's main attraction.

For Thursday and Friday the management has booked "The Vanishing American," a tensely dramatic story of the love of a white girl for an Indian and his almost hopeless love for her. The mysterious Navajo mountains furnish the background for this thrilling plot, played by a stellar cast of players.

"The Golden Princess," a forceful melodrama with plenty of action, is the week-end feature billed for Saturday. In it Betty Bronson is supported by a fine group of movie stars in a screen tale which embodies most everything that thrills the average human. This story is rich in everything—elaborate settings, thrills, action, plot and superbly played.

HEAT NOT CAUSE OF CLOUDBURSTS

Chicago, July 10—The series of hurricanes, disastrous rain and electrical storms and heat waves that are sweeping the United States and other countries have only a fragmentary connection, according to scientists here.

"About the only thing you can say is that the world seems to be having bad luck with the elements," said Professor Harry Fox, expert meteorologist of Northwestern university. "There is no scientific explanation for these freaks and the fact that they are coming at the same time is merely a coincidence."

Professor Fox said there was some connection between the storms, high winds and heat waves in this country and the floods in Mexico because the two countries are on the same continent. But the unusual manifestations in the states have nothing to do with the Mediterranean earthquakes or the deluges in Germany, he said.

C. A. Donnel, who is in charge of forecasting at the weather bureau here, pictures the central part of the United States as a great area of humid heat with cooler waves bumping against its outer rim and causing storms. He believes this was responsible for the damaging rain storms in Ohio and for the hurricane that struck several small North Dakota towns.

Meanwhile the midwest swelters and Donnel says the only change in sight is rain and the moisture will merely make the heat more unbearable.

The mercury climbed to 92 degrees in Chicago today for a new seasonal record. Reports from Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, Wisconsin, Minnesota and the southwest said the same condition existed there.

Central and western Canada was cooling off after temperatures ranging as high as 94 degrees but the natives were paying a fancy price for their heat relief. Cloudbursts and violent hail storms were reported from the western provinces.

AID OF SEABOARD SOUGHT FOR MIDLAND

Gainesville, Ga., July 10.—(Special.)—A meeting of the Gainesville Chamber of Commerce was held Friday afternoon for the purpose of discussing the likelihood of the Seaboard Air Line railway purchasing the Gainesville Midland railroad and making it a part of its large system.

The meeting was largely attended by local business men and a number of enthusiastic talks were made, all to the effect that it is the earnest desire of Gainesville for this purchase to be consummated, and that the line be operated by the Seaboard railroad. This would give Gainesville an additional trunk line railroad and would meet a need long felt throughout the Gainesville and northeast Georgia section.

Local business men pledged their continued support of the line and stated that they probably would be able to turn more business to it.

It was generally understood that the Seaboard would not continue to operate both lines of the Midland. It was first understood that the line from Gainesville to Monroe was preferred, but it is now understood that the Gainesville to Athens line is preferred.

As a result of the discussion, a motion was unanimously adopted inviting the Seaboard to purchase the Midland and come to Gainesville, and the hope was expressed that the Seaboard would find it essential that it operate both lines, but that this is strictly a business matter for the purchasing road to determine.

It was decided at the meeting that it would be best for Gainesville to take no part in any controversy that might arise regarding the matter between the citizens along the lines of the respective branches.

HAIRCUTS FOR SEALS

That's Latest Thing in Pribiloff Islands.

Seward, Alaska, July 10.—(AP)—Haircuts for seals is the latest thing in the Pribiloff Islands, in the Behring sea.

Ten thousand 1-year-old male seals will receive tonsorial attention this season, Captain A. Anderson, of the United States bureau of fisheries vessel Rider, reported on his arrival here yesterday.

The object of the shearing, Captain Anderson said, was to indicate the increase next year, as the seals are slaughtered only in a certain per cent each year. This year 10,000 seals were killed.

Chicago—What had been four barrels of grape juice when it left Paw Paw, Mich., was four barrels of grape wine when it arrived here. The heat probably caused the juice to ferment during the haul, explained the driver of the truck following his arrest.

Restaurant Man Didn't Eat His Own Food

"It's pretty tough for a restaurant man to have stomach trouble. My customers were always telling me I ought to eat in a good restaurant. The fact was I couldn't eat a thing that didn't bloat me up and no medicine or doctors helped me. I tried everything recommended and at last MAYR'S, and I assure you I didn't have to look any further. Since taking it I have been a well man." King of Monkeys Dies From Effects Of Latest Jag

(By Leased Wire to The Constitution and The Chicago Tribune.)

New York, July 10.—How drink led to the death of Pig-Tail, king of a monkey tribe that was led into captivity through the adoption of bibulous habits, was told following the arrival of the freighter, Atlantic City, a veritable floating zoo, from Singapore.

Pig-Tail's whole tribe of 28 were aboard in cages. Also there were two large pythons, two leopards, two tigers, two tapirs and a baby elephant, not to mention a dozen or so birds of paradise.

George M. Bistany told the story of Pig-Tail and his tribe. It was in the jungle of the Malay peninsula that he was caught. There he acquired his evil habits through contact with humans. He died on the ship in a drunken frenzy.

There is a native drink made from jungle herbs and known as marcsi, Bistany said.

"It looks like milk, tastes like absinthe and acts like dynamite," he explained.

Some of this concocotion was placed in a pan on the ground near a tree in which the monkeys were perched while the hunters retired to await developments.

Pig-Tail put his foot into the pan. He licked his foot and then bounced ten feet in the air, landing on all-fours in the pan and screamed to his friends who hastened to join him. Before long the whole tribe was cavorting about the jungle. After a while they became exhausted and went to sleep.

When they awoke they were in cages. Pig-Tail died aboard ship from the effects of his late jag.

No Delay Seen With Prisoners In Florida Jails

Tallahassee, Fla., July 8.—(AP)—There is no delay in getting prisoners from any of the county jails as far as the state prison state department is concerned.

This was the statement made by T. E. Andrews, chief prison clerk, regarding the action of the board of commissioners of state institutions in requesting Nathan Mayo, prisoner commissioner, to show cause why so much delay is experienced at the Dade county jail in getting prisoners to the Raiford state farm.

As soon as notices received by the prison department from the various sheriffs for the transfer of prisoners to the state farm, State Recruiting Officer O. H. Rogers, of Ocala, is promptly notified, Mr. Andrews stated.

If any delay occurs in taking the prisoners to the state farm, it is doubtless due to the inability of the one recruiting officer to handle the whole eastern section of the state, the prison clerk said. An assistant to Mr. Rogers looks after the territory west of Tallahassee.

In commenting on claims made by the board that one prisoner sentenced to die for murder, had escaped from the Dade jail after he should have been at Raiford, Mr. Andrews referred to the law which requires that such prisoners are to be delivered to the prison by the sheriff after the death warrant has been signed by the governor.

New York—Pasquale Ferrara deserved better luck with this one: Arrested for picking pockets in Grand Central station he explained that the waiting room bench had been the favorite resting place of his father that he, Pasquale, had often sought him there, and today he thoughtlessly took the stranger's pockets for those of his sire's pants. "Six months," said the judge.

Ashland, Wis.—Senator Lenroot, running for renomination in the fall primary, is going to have a world court debate with his opponent, Governor Blaine, if he has to put on a special county fair. When the governor declined his invitation because "people go to fairs to see horse races and other attractions," he telegraphed the Southwest Wisconsin fair, asking that it add another day "with no other attraction than a world court debate between Governor Blaine and myself."

FLORIDA FORBIDS 'DISCRIMINATION'

Tallahassee, Fla., July 10.—(AP)—The Florida railroad commission has ordered all railroad commissions and common carriers engaged in intrastate business in Florida to put in effect such rates in the transportation of fertilizer in carload and less shipments from points other than Jacksonville which would remove "unjust discrimination" found by the commission to exist against the latter city.

The rates, the order states, must not be on higher bases than those contemplated and applied in constructing rates on fertilizer carload and less from Jacksonville to other points. The railroads must also report to the commission "how and in what manner they have complied with this order," which, it was stated, is effective August 1.

The Seaboard Air Line railroad was found by the commission to be guilty of violation of its rule calling for the application of the same schedule of freight rates for subsidiaries as those in effect for controlling roads and was fined $1,000. The commission charged the road failed to establish for the Charlotte-Harbor & Northern railroad the rates as prescribed by the rule.

The commission has proved the sale of the Crescent City Telephone company, of Crescent City, Fla., to the Florida Telephone company, Orlando, for $7,500.

ITALY ENFORCES ANTI-STRIKE LAW

Alessandria, Italy, July 10.—(AP)—The first convictions under the new syndicalist law forbidding strikes was handed down by the labor court here today.

Seven laborers, employed in a jute factory at Corrosio, were found guilty of having on June 30 organized a strike of 800 laborers to obtain better working conditions.

Five were sentenced to 10 months' imprisonment each and the others, who are minors, to eight months. Under the syndicalist law, however, the penalties will not be applied, provided the men maintain good behavior for five years.

MRS. ETHEL TOPHAM SUCCUMBS SUDDENLY

Mrs. Ethel Topham, 53, of 224 Dodd avenue, beloved Atlanta woman, and wife of J. T. Topham, professor in the mechanics department at Georgia Tech for the past five years, died suddenly Saturday afternoon at the home, following a paralytic stroke.

Mr. Topham returned home shortly after 1 o'clock Saturday afternoon and found his wife sitting in a chair on the front porch in an unconscious condition. A physician was summoned and worked several hours with members of the family in an effort to revive her, but she died at 5 o'clock.

Mrs. Topham, a native of England, came to Atlanta in 1882 and has been a resident of the city since that time. She was an active member of the Episcopal church, and was well known in women's work of the city.

Funeral arrangement had not been completed Saturday night by Barclay and Brandon, funeral director in charge. The body will be taken to Richmond, Va., for interment Monday afternoon.

In addition to her husband Mrs. Topham is survived by two daughters, Miss Jeanette and Miss Minnie Topham; a sister, Mrs. H. G. Roffe, of New York; a brother, A. McD. Wheals, of Chattanooga, Tenn., and two nephews, Oscar and William Oldknow, well known local business men.

Officials Investigate Origin of Frat House Fire on Emory Campus

Emory University, Ga., July 10.—(Special.)—DeKalb county officers and Emory university officials were seeking today to determine the cause of a fire that damaged the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity house late Friday night.

Atlanta firemen who fought the flames stated that indications were that the fire was of incendiary origin.

This was the second fire on the Emory fraternity row within a week, the Pi Kappa Phi house having been partially destroyed Tuesday night. Both houses were owned by W. D. Thompson, prominent Atlanta attorney, and are understood to have been covered by insurance. Mr. Thompson, it was said Saturday, also owns a number of other houses on the row, renting them to the various fraternities.

It was pointed out Saturday that the Pi Kappa Phi house was unoccupied at the time of the fire there, while several Emory students were occupying the Pi Kappa Alpha house Friday night. All of them escaped without injury.

Apparently originating under the front steps, where the pile of rubbish was found, the Pi Kappa Alpha fire spread to the front porch, which was damaged. This was the extent of the loss, according to reports.

WHITE HOUSE CLEANING

Condemned Roof of President's Quarters Unsafe.

Washington, July 10.—With the President and Mrs. Coolidge settled at the summer white house in the Adirondacks, the executive mansion here is being prepared for as extensive overhauling as the workmen can undertake with assurance that it will be completed when the president returns.

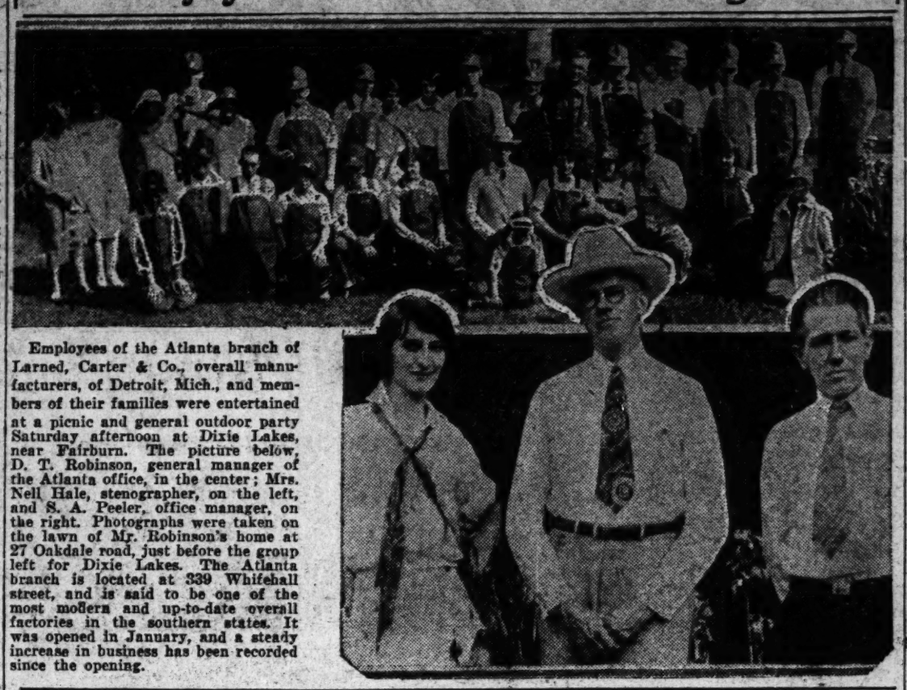

While painters are busy with the exterior, reconditioning of the interior is receiving the attention of another group of workers.

Although the repair program omitted for this year any alteration in the white house roof, which has been declared by army engineers to be unsafe and in danger of collapse, other changes will be made, including the replacement of the 20-year-old elevator by an up-to-date electric automatic lift, as well as a refinishing for the east room and new paint for other chambers. The president's office in the west wing will be left untouched but the corridors and other rooms of that extension will be reconditioned.

The telegram and telephone lines, which have been installed to give direct communication between the executive offices here and the summer white house, were opened yesterday.

Washington.—The American government will help teach the Irish how to fight. Under arrangements made by the Irish minister, T. A. Smiddy, six officers of the Irish Free State army will be students at the army service schools this winter.

Larned, Carter and Company Employees Enjoy First of Summer Outing Series

Decatur Conference Gives Five Ministers Authority To Preach

Decatur, Ga., July 10.—(Special.)—The district conference of the North Atlanta district which met at the First Methodist church in Decatur was well attended, there being a number of well known ministers among the visitors.

Bishop W. B. Beauchamp preached on Tuesday and Bishop Candler on Wednesday. Prominent among the speakers in the two-day conference were Dr. Harvey Cox, president of Emory university, Rev. Nathan Thompson, of Young Harris, and Dr. W. A. Thompson, of the LaGrange Female college.

Five young men were licensed to preach and five others were recommended to the next annual conference for admission into that body.

The following delegates were elected to represent the North Atlanta district at the annual conference in Atlanta next November: W. Bayne Gibson, Judge John S. Candler, Addison Maupin, Mrs. W. L. Albright, Robert Lee Avery, Joseph A. McCord, and James L. Key.

Dinner was served on the grounds each day. The district conference will meet next year at the First Methodist church in Atlanta.

The sessions were featured by a report of the temperance and social service committee, Dr. Elam F. Dempsey, chairman, which stated that the "eighteenth amendment should be defended by every lover of right and the Volstead law should be preserved against the insidious attacks of traitors in our midst, seeking to undermine the United States Constitution and break down the law by false propaganda."

Judge J. S. Candler gave a report on education and ministerial supply which stated that all the church schools of the North Georgia conference "have had most successful years."

Resort Near Rome Scene of Activity During Summertime

Constitution Bureau.

Rome, Ga., July 10.—(Special.)—Cloudland, the development on top of Lookout mountain, 33 miles from Rome over the Dixie and Atlanta-Muscle Shoals highway, is the scene of much activity as the summer season reaches its height. The annex to Hotel Cloudland has been completed and the new hotel under construction at the lake, which has been formed by a dam across Little river, will be completed within 30 days, it is said. A 50-acre apple orchard has been planted and a golf course is now under construction.

Hotel Cloudland and the annex contains approximately 100 rooms with all modern conveniences. The new hotel is being built by the Lookout Development company at a cost of approximately $200,000, it is said. It will contain 100 rooms, all with private bath.

The developers of Cloudland are striving to make this section not only a famous resort, but to develop it agriculturally as well. Thriving gardens containing a wide variety of vegetables are seen on the mountain, which give evidence that the sandclay soil is admirably suited to truck farming and other forms of agricultural development.

Postal Receipts Gain.

Rome, Ga., July 10.—(Special.)—More than a 3 per cent increase is shown in postal receipts for 1926 as compared with 1925, according to a report made by Mrs. Mary W. Barclay, postmaster.

For 1925 postal receipts for the first six months totaled $36,252.78 as compared with $37,235.59 this year.

This is a normal increase and is considered fairly good. March was the largest month in this year, the total being $7,198.64.

Wrangell Island Sought by Russia; Colony Planned

Nome, Alaska, July 10.—(AP)—Russia has launched another attempt to colonize Wrangell island, a barren bit of ice-locked land in the Arctic ocean, which already has claimed the lives of 18 colonists and explorers and has been considered uninhabitable.

An expedition of 20 Siberian Eskimo families fully equipped for a three year's stay on the island is on its way to Wrangell from the west side of Bering strait aboard the Russian ice breaker Red October (Krasny Oktibr). The island is to be renamed Lenin island (Lenin Mitroff) in honor of the soviet leader. The colonists are taking 100 dogs, 25 reindeer and six large Eskimo boats.

Equipment of the colony includes 3,000 reindeer pelts for clothing.

NEGRO AND TEAM KILLED BY BOLT AS WAGON TRAVELS

Rome, Ga., July 10.—(AP)—Henry Montgomery, 60, negro, and a pair of mules were killed by a lightning bolt here late today. Montgomery and his family were riding in a wagon at the time.

Other members of the family, with the exception of his wife, who was driving, were shocked. The wife was uninjured.

Bobby Jones Wins National Open Golf Title

BOBBY ESTABLISHED AS WORLD'S GREATEST, SAYS GETTY

ONLY NATURAL TITLE SHOULD GO TO JONES

BY FRANK GETTY,
(United News Staff Correspondent.)

Scioto Country Club, Columbus, Ohio, July 10.—Fading twilight, falling softly upon the rolling wind-swept fairways of Scioto with a touch that was refreshingly gentle after the blistering heat of the past three days, found a familiar scene being enacted on the smooth green lawn in front of the clubhouse.

A bronzed, smiling youth, shifting his feet embarrassedly, was facing a battery of cameras and accepting a golfing trophy, emblematic of the championship in the hardest test the game provides.

What more natural than that this prize, representing the national open golf championship of 1926, should be handed to Bobby Jones, of Atlanta?

For Bobby proved today what a few may have doubted before, that he is without doubt the greatest golfer in the world.

Greater Victory.

And Bobby, lion-hearted, loving the game at which he excels, won an even greater victory than the championship, for he proved his sportsmanship in a dozen different ways and his courage beyond question. When the heat on Friday took its tool and his eye muscles went back on him for a while, the Atlantan shot his worst round of any championship in which he ever has entered yet. During that round, Bobby called a penalty stroke on himself for an accidental motion of his ball which no one else observed. It is in ways like this that Jones proved his greatness—a greatness which has made him the first golfer in the history of the game to win both the American and British open championships in the same year. Even more historic is Bobby's record in light of the fact that he won these titles while he also held the American amateur championship. The Jones' achievement is one which has never been equalled before and is unlikely to be duplicated.

With a burst of brilliant playing, perhaps the greatest ever seen under similar circumstances in an open championship, Bobby Jones won today.

He came from behind to triumph over adversity and nose out a slim, young Italian 1:! from New York, one Joe Turnesa, who had jumped into the lead at the end of 54 holes and who would have duplicated Gene Sarazen's feat at Stokie in 1922 had he not collapsed on his final round.

Jones' aggregate for the 72 holes was 293, Turnesa's 294. This pair was out in front of the field. Their golf was as creditable as any ever played in a championship when the difficulties of Scioto are taken into consideration. For two days there was scorching heat, and occasional treacherous winds; on the third day there was rain, sudden guests which slashed the faces of the contestants and tremendous and unruly galleries which galloped over hill and dale like herds of buffaloes.

Worried Players.

The spectators crowded in upon the players, especially Bobby Jones, who needed all his nerve to retain his control and break par for the last nine holes.

The abysmal rough which yawned and magnetized the flying white balls, driven by the largest number of players ever to contest a national open championship, cost many an aspirant his chance.

But Jones found the rough as often as any of the leaders. It was his brilliant recovering which won for him at Scioto.

Although this proved a course for shot makers, the greatest shot maker of them all, Willie MacFarlane, last year's champion, was out of it in the final test, finishing far back in the field with 307.

As for Cyril Walker, the title holder in 1924, he has gone back so far in his golf as to need 321 for 72 holes of the Scioto course.

The "first 10" were: Bobby Jones, Atlanta, 293; Joe Turnesa, New York, 294; Bill Mehlhorn, Chicago, 297; Gene Sarazen, New York, 297; Leo Diegel, New York, 297; Johnny Farrell, New York, 207; Walter Hagen, Pasadena, 298; Willie Hunter, Los Angeles, 300, and MacDonald Smith, Willie Klein, Dan Williams and Tommy Armour tied at 301.

It should have been Mehlhorn's championship if the fair haired, erratic Chicago pro had possessed the calm determination and fighting heart of a Bobby Jones. But "Wild Bill" blew up in the stretch, unable to stand the strain.

While everyone was paying attention to Turnesa, Jones, Mehlhorn and Leo Diegel, there came Johnny Farrell and Willie Hunter from nowhere in particular, shooting fancy sixty-nines on their third rounds, to get within striking distance of the leaders. Hunter with a 70 in the afternoon might have won, but he wasn't eaqual to it.

The story of Scioto will be one of appreciation of Bobby Jones' real greatness, for the "first ten" came into the final round nearly neck and neck with any one of the ten having a chance to win.

Making the Pace.

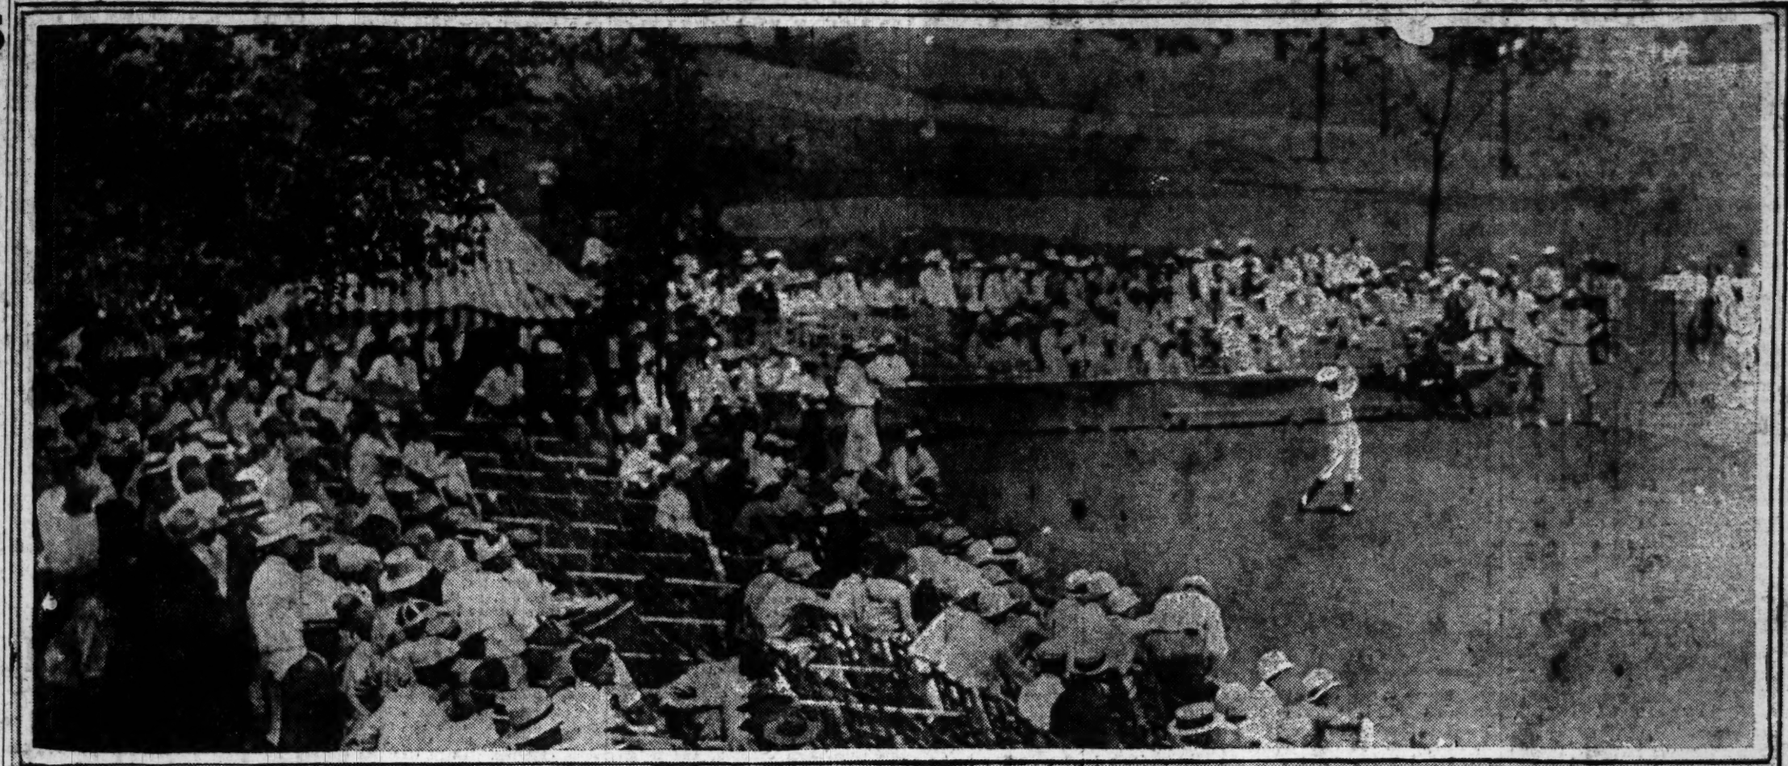

Joe Turnesa was making the pace, but the young New Yorker wasn't equal to the task. In a sense it was his failure that led Jones to win, but more exactly it was the fact that Bobby could play real golf when others couldn't that gave him his third great golfing honor within a year.

In addition to his triumphs of the past year, it must be remembered that for five years, Bobby has stood second or better in national open championships. He won the title first in 1923. With this in mind, his victory at Scioto does not seem remarkable, until that 79 on the second round is taken into consideration.

The new champion had started off with a 70. That was two under par but two more than Bill Mehlhorn needed that first scorching day when the field was so large that each man played but 18 holes. And then came the inexplicable 79. Nothing but trouble, two penalty shots and a certain languor produced by the heat and a bit too much golf seems to be the only explanation.

Back came Bobby today with a 71 in the morning and there he was up among the leaders again. From that time on it was pretty apparent who was going to win.

ATLANTA BOY SINKS BIRDIE TO WIN CROWN

of golf. A struggling youth against all the tough breaks known to golf, striving to overcome a touch of staleness engendered by the heart-breaking play of two major tournaments within the space of three weeks. That is the real story of Bobby's victory.

But Bobby, in his nerve-wracking battle over the Scioto links has won more than the assured title of the world's greatest golfer. He has won the love and respect of countless followers, for he has proved his high sportsmanship and courage in a dozen different ways.

When, during the heat of Friday, the Atlantan's mastery over his clubs failed him for a while, he shot a 79, the worst score he has ever had in a championship tourney. Yet during that terrible round, Bobby called a penalty stroke on himself, for the slight movement of his ball which had been observed by no one but himself. Such things as this have made his victory overwhelmingly popular. The crown of golfdom goes not only to the game's greatest player, but to a royal sportsman as well.

He won through on sheer nerve, seemingly beyond the pale of possibility, almost given up as lost after turning in a disastrous 79 on Friday. Bobby came back on Saturday and finished the morning round with a phenomenal 71, then went out in the afternoon and after making the turn with a 38, came in over the back nine with a beautiful 35 to win the championship by one stroke.

The story of his exhibition of iron stamina will never be adequately told. It is one of those things in the realm of sport which denies picturisation on paper. It will simply go down in the memory of those thousands who watched the play as the greatest comeback ever staged under adverse conditions, in the history of golf.

Afternoon Round.

With the greatest gallery ever assembled for a golf championship, Bobby started off the afternoon round today three strokes down to Joe Turnesa, who was leading after the morning play was complete.

The faith displayed in the prowess of the great Bobby was evident in the size of the crowd which followed him, though many considered him too far back to win. His beautiful morning round had put him back in the running but three strokes are three strokes when such a stellar professional as Joe Turnesa holds the advantage.

Bobby got off to a bad start with a buzzard five on the first hole. His drive was long and to the right but safe on the fairway and he hooked his high pitch shot to the bunker on the left of the green. His chip shot from the trap was eight feet short of the pin and he failed to sink the putt for a par four, taking a five. On this green the gallery was given a lecture by Charles Pfeffof, of the United States Golf association, on the etiquette of golf. Thousands crowding around the green to catch a glimpse of the players set up a never-ending movement which sometimes lasted until the putts were down or missed. This condition was trying on the nerves of even the ironclad Bobby and officials made every effort to silence the crowds.

Not beset by his usual trouble on the tricky second hole, Bobby was safe with his drive, but his pitch was short of the green. A pretty chip shot laid the ball dead to the cup for a four. This was the beginning of a number of remarkable recoveries which the champ made during the afternoon.

Again on the third Bobby was in trouble when his iron shot, after a terrific drive, rolled to a trap on the left of the green. His chip shot was good, but the five-footer failed to sink and Bobby took a five, his second buzzard in the first three holes.

When his first putt hung on the lip of the cup on the short fourth hole, Bobby missed his chance for a birdie and a chance to lop off one of the lost strokes. He took his par three, however, as the gallery roared. At this point the news came that Turnesa had taken the same score as Bobby on the first four holes, leaving Bobby still three down to the New Yorker.

On the long fifth Bobby was on the right edge of the huge rolling green with his second, but at least 50 feet from the pin. It was necessary for Bobby to roll over two mounds in the green, with the cup directly at the bottom of the second elevation. His roll-up put was perfect for direction, but the hill sent the ball rolling over the cup and down to the bottom of the green, 15 feet from the cup. His second putt was a few inches short and he was forced to take his third buzzard of the round.

On in three shots on the long sixth hole, Bobby went down in two putts for a par five after he had taxed the nerves of the gallery by nearly holing a long putt for a birdie four.

Then Bobby got the only break of the day on a putt. After laying his second shot dead on but 30 feet short of the pin on the seventh hole, he sunk the putt over a rolling green. The crowds literally went wild after this shot and a rest was necessary on the next tee before Bobby could shoot.

Not satisfied with this phenomenal putt, Bobby stepped out and took a birdie four on the long eighth when he laid his second shot 15 feet from the cup and holed in two putts. This performance again sent the gallery on a rampage of joy and word came that Turnesa was all even at the eighth, which news was accepted with joy in view of the fact that Bobby had been in so much trouble on the early holes.

Four Strokes Down.

The ninth told its usual sad story for Bobby. On previous rounds he had been in the bunker at the left on the green and this afternoon he played a long shot in hopes of missing the trap. He played the iron with too much vigor and the ball trickled over the back of the green into the rough. His chop shot also was too strong and he was forced to take two putts for a buzzard four. This made his outside nine total 38, one stroke higher than that of Joe Turnesa, who completed the hole in 37. This left Bob four strokes down to the leader at the turn. A condition which would have beaten many a stalwart golfer only served to spur the fighting Bob to greater efforts and he set out to do the impossible and pick up four strokes in the back nine.

Again, as in the morning, Bobby used an iron from the tenth tee and played his tee shot safely to the top of the hill in full view of the green. His pitch shot was at the left of the green 35 feet from the pin. Playing [illegible] a birdie, Bobby was too strong

Murray Wins Southern Net Title

Owens and Watters Lose Doubles Crown To Waters, Granger

New Orleans, July 10.—(By the Associated Press.)—Daniel K. Murray, Jr., New Orleans, wrested the southern tennis championship from Edward Pfeiffer, Louisville, defending titleholder, in three straight sets here this afternoon. The former Tulane intercollegiate star outlasted and outstroked the champion in effecting the transfer of the title, winning 6-4, 6-3, 6-0.

The challenger, who was runner-up to Pfeiffer last year, grew stronger as the match progressed, and early in the afternoon's play indicated the probability of the sweeping victory that was to follow. He was off in front with the first game of the first set and, although after he assumed an early lead in the second, the champion evened the count in games at three-all, he ran out from there in impressive fashion. In the final set Murray's tennis was brilliant, while Pfeiffer gave evidences of tiring and was not able to negotiate a game.

Murray's generalship was good, strategy being mixed with good strokes to blast his way to the final victory. Pfeiffer showed only flashes of the brilliancy that made him champion and carried him to the finals in this tournament. His back-hand was constantly needled, and frequently he used it to deadly effect.

Arthur Watters and Charles Granger, New Orleans, captured the doubles championship by defeating Frank Owens, Atlanta, and Douglas Watters, Mulberry, Fla., 4-6, 6-3, 2-6, 6-4, 6-2. The final doubles match became an endurance test, in which many lapses occurred, the brilliant play in previous doubles match being conspicuous by its absence.

The women's singles championship will be decided tomorrow with Miss Irving Murphy, New Orleans, defending her title against Miss Doris Leblanc, Baton Rouge.

LETTON WINS WEEKLY GUN CLUB SHOOT

W. H. Letton, with 48 out of a possible 50, was high scorer in the regular weekly shoot at the Atlanta Gun club traps Saturday afternoon. Dr. J. C. Wright, with a 45 was second, and Trammell Scott placed third with a 43.

Unusually high winds during the afternoon, followed by a heavy rainstorm lowered the scoring considerably and made the shooting more difficult.

Trammell Scott led the duck boat handicap shoot with a 20 and 22 in the first and second phase and a 19 in the third. Dr. J. C. Wright placed second in two of the phases and Joe Cothran placed second in the other of the phases.

Black Crackers Open Series Here

Monday the Atlanta Black Crackers will open a two-week series here at Spiller field. The Nashville Giants will be the guests for the first three days of the first week, and Chattanooga's colored bat wielders will try their luck with the locals the last of the week.

The last game with the Birmingham Barons scheduled for Saturday afternoon was rained out and the Black Crackers took to their cars in which they travel the colored southern loop and made way for Atlanta to prepare for the two-week grind.

The first of the last week of the home stay the Black Crackers will take on the Memphis outfit for a three-game series and will wind up the home stay with the New Orleans bunch.

The two-week stay at home will give the Black Crackers a good chance to take down the holders of the upper part of the league ladder. In drawing up the last half of the season's schedule, the Black Crackers found themselves with a majority of their games to be played on the home lot.

Starting the second half of the season anew the Black Crackers have high hopes of copping the pennant. The team is full of spirit and are expecting to bring the gonfalon to their home grounds. A number of local colored business houses will close for a half day in order to allow their employees to see the opening game. A special section will be reserved for the white fans.

National League

CUBS COP TWO GAMES.

Chicago, July 10.—Chicago took both games of a twin bill from Brooklyn today by scores of 6 to 4 and 3 to 1. The first game went 10 innings. Mack Wilson's batting proved the factor in the first contest after the game had see-sawed for nine innings. With a runner on second Wilson uncorked a drive into the right-field bleachers for a homer which decided the issue. The second game Chicago bunched hits in the third inning off McWeeny and the eighth inning off Ehrhardt. Jones pitched a steady game but weakened in the ninth inning, when Brooklyn scored its lone run.

FIGHTS HERE TUESDAY

Benny Regan, one of Atlanta's most promising young leather-pushers, is matched with Mickey Kendrick for a 10-round battle Tuesday night at the auditorium as one of the features to be staged by the Gate City A. A. C. In the three bouts with Kendrick, Regan has received two draws and lost a decision in the other. This bout promises to be a real battle, as it is more or less a "rubber" for Regan.

Pels Hit 3 Pitchers To Continue Stride

Three Chattanooga pitchers, McKenty, Sweeney and Jones, were ineffective against the Pelicans Saturday, yielding 13 safeties as the New Orleans Southern league leaders won, 9 to 1.

Memphis opened a home series by taking the Crackers into camp 5 to 2. Each club scored one run in the opening frame. After that no tally was marked up until the last half of the eighth when the Chicks staged a rally that scored four men and drove McLaughlin from the mound. Atlanta scored their second run in the final inning.

The league-trailing Little Rock club nosed out Birmingham, downing the Barons 7 to 6 in ten innings. Each team worked two pitchers and all were hit freely.

Hood Gets Homer.

A home run by Hood in the ninth failed to tie the score and Nashville beat Mobile, 7 to 6.

Doubleheaders were the order of the day in the Sally league. The Spinners won two games from Knoxville, 26-5 and 5-1. In the opening game Greenville batters touched Ormand for 25 safeties.

Charlotte split even with Asheville, dropping the first game 17 to 9 and winning the second, 11 to 1.

Spartanburg and Macon also split even, the Spartans nosing out in the first game, 3 to 2, and Macon taking the second, 7 to 3.

Columbia pounded Alter and Adcock for 21 safeties and won the game from Augusta, 13 to 7, but were held at bay by Phillips and dropped the second, 11 to 3.

The Montgomery Lions of the Southeastern, took their third game of the series with Savannah, pounding Humphries and Maitland for 14 hits to win, 13 to 6.

Columbus downed St. Augustine, 10 to 8, in a free-hitting match in which each club made two errors.

Red Smith Stars.

The Jacksonville Tars, aided by Red Smith's double with the bases full, staged a five run rally in the fifth inning and beat the Albany Nuts, 6 to 2.

In the Virginia league Kinston took the opener of a doubleheader from Norfolk, 6 to 1, but the second game ended in a 6 to 6 tie when darkness stopped play at the end of the tenth inning. Richmond and Portsmouth divided a double bill, the Colts winning the first game 14 to 6, but losing the second, 11 to 2. Wilson ran away from Petersburg in their first game and won 14 to 1, but were nosed out in the second which the Virginians took, 2 to 1.

In the Florida State league, Bradenton beat Fort Myers, 3 to 1; Lakeland nosed out Tampa, 5 to 4; St. Petersburg had a one run margin over Orlando, 3 to 2; and Sarasota beat Sanford, 8 to 5.

Many Turf Stars of Past Season Fall by Wayside

BY FRENCH LANE.

Nearly a dozen first division turf stars of last season have come to the races this year and all but failed to win their daily oats and hay money.

Most of them won enough in stake and handicap money last year to keep them a lifetime, but the failure of so many speedy thoroughbreds in so short a time has been one of the remarkable developments of the racing year.

About an equal number of eastern and western stars have failed to run anywhere near up to their form of last season, the most notable failures in the east being American Flag and Pompey, while in the west Caractus and King Nadi have been the biggest flops.

King Nadi Handled Strangely.

King Nadi might not be shuffled into this group but for the strange manner in which his owner, J. J. Troxler, has handled him. He has been scratched out of any number of races he might have won by Owner Troxler, and has been permitted to start in others where his chance of victory was extremely slight.

American Flag, late to reach good racing form last year, may round to at Saratoga and make up the prestige he has lost at Belmont Park and other tracks during the early part of the season. He has been close up a time or two lately, but on his form of last season, should have been an easy winner of the same races.

Pompey's dismal failure had its beginning in the derby. Since then he has shown little or no class. Trainer Karrick still believes he is a great horse and will show his true ability later. But the season is past the halfway mark and Pompey cannot wait much longer and regain any lost laurels.

Others which have dropped from stardom almost into the has-been class within a few months are Son of John, Canter, Single Foot and Silver Fox in the east and T. S. Jordon, Flagstaff, Energy, Gibbons Menifee, Chicago and Broadway Jones in the west.

Veteran trainers say more good horses of last year have gone wrong this year than during any season since the turf sport was established in America. They are at a loss to account for it.

Columbus Picks Up K. C. Semipro Stars

Arthur Hans, Kansas City semipro pitcher, has been given a contract by the Columbus club. Carl Walker, a college player from Marietta, Ohio, has also joined Columbus. He is an outfielder.

'Third Floor Gang' Starts Celebration Of Bobby's Victory

BY CLIFF WHEATLEY.

The new home of the Atlanta Athletic club is in its accustomed location at the intersection of Carnegie Way and Cone street; its thousand-dollar chandeliers are not scattered in a billion bits over the polished floors of the main dining room; its magnificent furnishings and costly draperies are unscathed, despite the fact that only a few hours ago Bobby Jones added the American open golf title to a collection which already include the American amateur and the British open championships.

We have Al Doonan's word for it that the club is in position; Tick Tichenor assures us that no damage has come to the chandeliers which were brought over from Austria to grace the ceiling of the big dining room; Coach W. A. Alexander asks us to please believe that furnishings and draperies are in place.

But the trio would not vouch for the condition of Bob, the Senegambian doorman.

Really, the celebration was too much for Bob. Not that he gazed upon wine that was red, or rather, wine that was white, as most wine is in these noble days of the nation's thirst. Not that, folks; Bob blames his voice.

Coach Alexander says that Bob is correct.

Bob Was Speechless.

"I had just entered the building," Coach declared. "Out of my right eye I saw the 'third floor gang' piling from the elevator. Out of my left eye I saw Bob at the telephone. He was trying to talk, but he had lost his voice. His eyes seemed to be about to pop out of his head. 'Eh, eh, eh, eh,' Bob muttered. That's all he could say. Then one of the 'gang' pushed Bob aside; someone else reached for the receiver. An instant later "Jones wins!" boomed over the lobby. Halfway to the ceiling the doorman went, propelled by arms whose owners had gone crazy suddenly. Down he came, back up again; down he came, back up again, and so on until the 'gang' mercifully turned their attention to some other victim."

"Now, the coach," began Mr. Tichenor, one of golf's pioneers in Atlanta and possessing in his own right, through his own links prowess, enough silver plate to stock a jewelry store, "has exaggerated things a bit. As a matter of fact, when the news came in that Bobby had won, there was some cheering. There was not quite as much as there was when Georgia and Tech played basketball. You see, there were only about 20 of us present today, but we did pretty well, I think.

"We may do better later on tonight," he continued. "We don't feel sufficiently at home in this new building to really express our delight at Bobby's victory, but we're becoming acclimated rapidly and may feel free to do some real cheering.

"I made some very valuable discoveries today," he continued. "I am confident that one telephone is not sufficient for the use of 20 men, all of whom are seeking information at the same time. Sometimes we laughed, sometimes we cried. And all the time we were pacing up and down, up and down a hallway 40 feet long. By actual measurement I walked 42 miles up and down that 40-foot hall this afternoon, but it was worth it."

Jones' Achievement.

"Worth it?" broke in Mr. Doonan, "Why, man, we've experienced something the world has never experienced, something the world will never experience again. And it was left to Bobby to give us that thrill. Three national golf championships in the possession of one golfer and that golfer a member of this old club! One minute, I think I'm dreaming. The next minute I realize that it's all true. Gosh!"

That "gosh!" as Mr. Doonan expressed it, with proper emphasis, of course, expresses the true feeling of every member of the Atlanta Athletic club. The same holds true for all of Atlanta, all of Georgia, all of the south and all of the nation, but other columns of this newspaper are handling that particular phase of the aftermath of this most amazing victory of Bobby Jones.

The new home of the Atlanta Athletic club has its foundations in solid rock. Its walls are reinforced and it gives forth the idea of solidity. Thank heaven it's strongly built, for it would not have stood up under the test it was given last night when club members began assembling, joining the "third floor gang" in their celebration of Bobby Jones' victory.

Came in Droves.

They came in droves. The triumph was the sole topic of conversation. Some sat down at the bridge tables for a few rubbers; they stayed late, but they were not playing bridge. They were playing Bobby's Saturday rounds, going over every shot, from their idol's rocky start to his sparkling finish.

The lobby was crowded. That par of Bobby's here; that birdie there, and occasionally that "buzzard" over there—that's what their conversation was filled with, and plans, of course, for the rousing reception they're going to give Bobby when he arrives today.

America has produced amateur golfers who held the national amateur and the national open titles simultaneously. Great Britain, too, has done likewise, but it remained for Bobby Jones to win first the American amateur, then the British open and to cap the climax, sweep to victory in the American open, holding all three titles at the same time.

If doubt there has been in recent years that Bobby is the best golfer living, Bobby dispelled it Saturday. If further proof were needed that he is the greatest golfer the world has ever seen, Bobby supplied it Saturday when he scored that birdie four on the eighteenth after he knew that he had to have it in order to win!

UMPIRES COST BIG LEAGUES $200,000 YEAR

BY IRVING VAUGHAN.

Umpiring, either in the big leagues or any other leagues, probably never will reach the state where the partisan fan will look upon it as an occupation suitable for any except crooks, robbers, thieves or what have you.

From the viewpoint of Fan Knowitall the umpire is always against him, but happily the rabid ravings of the cash customers have failed to hamper the growth of the umpiring system or to discourage men of baseball brains from seeking it as honorable toil.

It is only a short cry back to the days of the one umpire a game. He stood behind the pitcher, called balls and strikes and ran toward a base whenever a play happened to be on. When one looks back at it now he or she easily can see that it wasn't alone a precarious occupation, but one calling for more eyesight and judgment than the average fan is called upon to display in a lifetime.

Three Umpires Now Used.

As the game grew and the big leagues became prosperous the dual system was adopted. It was looked upon as the short road to correct decisions but it developed flaws. Now we find the majors operating with three men to a game and under a scheme, devised by Tommy Connolly, charter member of the American league staff, whereby there always are at least two pairs of umpiring eyes on every play.

Connolly's suggestion was made to his chief, Ban Johnson, and it was put into effect immediately. It worked out so well in practice that the National league arbiters promptly adopted the same arrangement and they, too, have discovered that it not only simplifies the work but makes for accuracy, and the latter is the thing most sought.

It also might be termed expensive. The three-man system necessitates the employment of five more than carried in the past. One is emergency man. An umpire's salary will average $6,000 a year, so the cost to each league for its decisions is approximately $100,000. Compare that to the less than $10,000 for a complete staff of four men 25 years ago and you have a pretty fair idea that baseball is getting along.

Base Umpires Shift.

There is nothing complicated about the system that Connolly worked out. With two umpires on the job, one watched the plate, the other the bases. Occasionally in the last few years it happened that three would be working one game. The base umpires would be stationed at first and third but under this arrangement the third base arbiter was practically of no value because he had only one or two plays a game requiring his judgment.

Connolly figured out the way to get best results and to make it almost impossible for a play to escape would be to have the blue-suited fellows shift positions according to the way the sacks were populated.

With nobody on the sacks now the base umpires station themselves at first and third. This puts them in a position to give the plate umpire a tip, if needed, on balls that might be hit along the foul lines. When a batter survives at first base the umpire remains there to watch him, but the third base judge moves behind second so as to be available when the runner on first advances. The same umpire watches third base, also, as does the man behind the plate.

Get Closeup on Plays.

When a runner stops at second or third the two field umpires shift. The first base guesser takes up his station between first and second where he can watch two bags. The other goes behind third where he, too, can watch two of the three cushions. What makes the scheme practical is that in close plays where a runner is sliding into a base the umpire can stand still to watch what happens. Under the old system they were frequently on the run while a play was being made and it resulted in many questionable verdicts.

The one surviving drawback to the business of umpiring is the inclination of the arbiters to interfere in the questionable verdicts of one another. They seem to have sort of an unwritten law on this point. Unless an umpire whose decision is under protest makes a direct request for help his fellow workers will greet a kick from a manager or captain with a "I didn't see the play."

Of course, umpires have secret signs by which they convey information from one to the other on the field, but they don't always take advantage of them.

Racer Injured In Track Spill

Speedway, Altoona, Pa., July 10.—(AP)—The first event of the national championship motorcycle races here this afternoon was marked by a bad spill. Rounding the east turn on the last lap, John Bodnar, Pittsburgh racer, lost control and crashed from the track. He suffered a possible puncture of the lung and a broken shoulder. He was removed to an Altoona hospital.

Two Good Games Today at Fort

Two more corking good games are on the boards for today at Fort McPherson, the first game starting at 1:15 p. m.

College Park nine will be the 22nd infantry's first opponent, and then the postoffice team will try their luck with the soldiers.

The 22nd infantry has met both of the teams before and each time were only able to eke out a victory after a brilliant battle. This makes the third time the soldiers have played the postoffice team, and each outfit holds one victory, so this will be the "rubber" game of a three-game series.

The 22nd infantry has one of the best teams that has represented the soldiers in quite a number of years. Their winning of nine straight games is indeed a good record, and from present outlook they are due to make it 10 straights before nightfall.

Georgia Amateur Golf Meet To Draw Big Field

BRILLIANT COMEBACK MADE BY ATLANTA STAR

golfdom by qualifying in the national amateur in 1916 when only 14 years old.

Had to Work Hard.

Jones had to work harder for this victory, probably, than for any of his others, for he confessed he was stale from too much competition. He had gone through a hard struggle in Great Britain and had been traveling for weeks. He did not show the effects of this during his first round except that his fine 70 came of itself, he said. He did not seem to get hold of the ball on many shots.

The surfeit of golf demanded its toll in the second round and after going out in 39, he took 40 for the homeward trip. Even in this round his marvelous ability displayed itself for he scored par or better on a number of holes. He expressed disgust with the round and hoped he could escape competitive golf for a long time.

Recovering today he cut one stroke off par with a 71, and was only three strokes behind the leader at the beginning of the last round. He did not start auspiciously on this circuit, taking a five on the first hole and also on the third, owing to faulty approaches. He slipped again on the difficult 5th where he found the rough on the double track Friday.

Then he bagged a couple of birdies only to slip to a four on the short ninth, which was his worst spot on the course, for he took three fours and a five on it, always by falling short in a trap.

Jones found his cunning again as he entered the last lap, scoring seven fours in a row, one of them a birdie. In fact he varied this score on each of the last nine holes only by taking a par three on the baby 17th.

Had to Have Birdie.

The gallery was all agog by this time, for it was realized that he had to get a birdie four on the 480-yard 18th. The wave of spectators swept down both sides of the fairway from the tee to the hole, and they were rewarded for their attentions, for Jones whaled out a splendid drive of 260 yards. A wild cheer went up when the Atlantan plunked his ball on the green, 220 yards away with a well hit iron.

The pellet came to rest 25 feet from the pin and Bobby all but holed the putt for an eagle three. He got down for the desired birdie and then sat down to watch what his trailing competitors would do.

Another who was a possible winner during this race was Bill Mehlhorn, of Chicago, who led the field the first day with a record 68 to Jones' 70 and again led the second day with 143 while Bobby had 149 by virtue of a 79 on the second round. But Mehlhorn fell off today, taking 76 in the morning and 79 in the afternoon for a total of 297, which tied him for third place. Mehlhorn lost on the last nine as he was even with Jones up to the home stretch.

Mehlhorn tried valiantly, but took seven on the long 12th, where he got enmeshed in the terrific rough that has overcome such noted golfers as Jim Barnes and Jock Hutchison, who failed to qualify, and took seven. His task was almost impossible then, when he got two threes in a row only to fail by going one over par on the 16th and getting no better than par on the last two holes.

Another pursuer of the world's champion was Willie Hunter, of Los Angeles, who once was British amateur champion, the only big title Jones has failed to win thus far. Hunter, by virtue of a splendid 69 this morning, needed only a par 72 to tie Jones but the best he could do was 79 for a total of 300, which landed him in eighth place.

Still more redoubtable was Walter Hagen, but the former champion needed a 69 to turn the trick. As the birdies would not enter his net, so he took a 74 for a 298 to win seventh place. Leo Diegel needed only a 71 on his last round to tie Bobby and took 74 to tie with Mehlhorn for third position.

John Farrell also needed a 69, but got 73 to tie for third. Gene Sarazen, while he had no chance to overhaul Jones, got a sweet 70 to share third place.

And all the time these stars were struggling over the links, Bobby, almost surfeited with honors, calmly sat in the club house, awaiting the verdict. It was only when President Fownes, of the United States Golf association, presented the championship cup that the genial champion stepped into a massed circle of admiring humanity amid the plaudits due a hero. His only speech of acceptance was a modest "thank you."

It fell to MacDonald Smith, of New York, western open title holder, to make the best score of the day. He burned up the course in the morning with a 68, equalling Mehlhorn's record for the links. But Smith had taken a miserable 82 for his first round, and with 75 in the last circuit could do no better than 301. He tied at this mark with Dan Williams, Tommy Armour and Willie Klein.

Tied with Evans at 302 were Al Espinosa and Jack Forrester, while in a tie for sixteenth place was Jimmy Thompson, of Richmond, Va., who is only 17 years old. In spite of a poor 82 on Friday, young Thompson got a total of 306, scoring 73 and 74 today. He shared that score with no less personages than Mike Brady, Laurie Ayton and George McLean.

The former champion, Willie MacFarlane, of New York, who won at Worcester last year only after a double tie, slumped to an 81 on the last round for a total of 307. He started with a par 72, but got 79 on Friday and was only fair with a 75 this afternoon. He tied with John Rogers, of Pittsburgh, for last place among the prize winners.

There were no particular upsets, except the elimination of some stars in the first two rounds. Bobby Cruickshank, who also once tied with Jones for this title, was expected to do better than his 318, and Cyril Walker, former champion, had been looked to for a better score than 321, but they never got going. John Jurey, of Portland, Ore., northwest champion, who startled the ex[pert] with a 70 in the first round, [ble]ped to 80 in the second and took [tw]o 84s today, totalling 318.

Keefe Carter, of Oklahoma City, western amateur titlist, dropped out during the second round after taking 45 on the first nine.

Jones did not start so well in the final round, taking five on the first hole and doing the like three times more by the time he reached the sixth. Turnesa was also three over fours at that point.

Undismayed by the sultry weather, Bobby's gallery flocked around him in increasing numbers at the start of the final 18 holes this afternoon. Jones drove perfectly off No. 1 tee, but he hooked his second to the left of the green and it found the bunker. He approached to within 6 feet of the cup and just missed his putt, taking a 5 for the hole, one over par.

Down the fairway as straight as the well-known bullet was Jones' drive on the second. It was a 300-yarder. His second mashie was short, however, and good-natured Bobby dropped the club in disgust, took off his sweater and beamed with determination. He was mad as he took his stance for the third shot and he almost holed out the approach. He took a four, sinking his putt. One over par now for the second round.

On the third his drive was to the edge of the rough and to the left of the fairway. His second was in the bunker to the left of the green. He came well out with his third, placing it 9 feet from the cup. He missed the putt and took a five. Two over par now.

Bobby whaled out another perfect drive on No. 3 and his second was on the green 30 feet from the pin. The wind seemed to bother him. The green is hilly and he tried hard for the cup but missed. He foozled the short one and took a five.

He drove into the rough on the next one. His second again found the whiskered grass and his third was short. He took a five.

Gets Long Drive.

He smacked out a 275-yard drive on No. 7 and his second landed on the green 30 feet from the cup. He holed it out for a birdie three and the pent-up enthusiasm of the crowd let go in a roar.

His drive from No. 8 tee was 300 yards easily. He was on the edge of the green with his second and took two putts for a four. Another birdie.

He was on the ninth carpet in two, but the old putter went bad again and he took two more for a four. That's a tough hole for Bobby.

Jones out 38, two over par.

Jones got a par 4 on the tenth of the last round, while Turnesa took 6 on the twelfth, giving Jones an opening.

Jones played an iron off No. 10 tee to avoid the hazards. His second shot was on the edge of the short grass. His approach was too strong, but he had an easy putt for a four.

Drops Two More.

Turnesa dropped two more strokes to par on the 13th and 14th. He seemed to play more raggedly as a large part of the gallery deserted Jones to watch him. Jones kept up his good start, getting two pars and birdie on the 10th, 11th and 12th to gain two strokes on Turnesa.

On the 11th Jones made another perfect drive. His second was at the edge of the green and his third 15 feet from the cup. He holed out in four.

His drive on the 12th was to the left of the fairway. His second just missed the trap and rolled in front of the green. His third was 4 feet from the pin and he holed out in four.

Straight and true off No. 13 tee with a 280-yard drive, but his second was bunkered. He laid an iron shot a foot from the cup for another four.

Drops a Stroke.

Jones dropped a stroke on the par three fourteenth. He took a four. His drive bounced off the straw hat of a spectator and flopped into a bunker. His mashie out was ten yards over the cup. He just missed the putt and went home with the next one. The gallery was stretching its neck into a corkscrew to see Bobby finish. Turnesa finished his final round in 77 for a total of 294. At the time Turnesa finished Jones needed even par on the last four holes to tie for the lead. Jones got his par on the 15th and 16th and needed only two more perfect holes to tie Turnesa.

On the sixteenth he put his drive 75 yards in front of the green—his good second was eight yards from the pin, and he missed the putt by an inch. Another four. He took a par 3 for the short seventeenth. His drive was on and two putts sent him home. The gallery got very much excited as Bobby neared the finish.

He was on the eighteenth green in two. His long putt was short and he took another four.

Thirty-five for the round, one under par.

The Morning Round.

The result of the national open championship was thrown into uncertainty at the end of the morning round, when Walter Hagen, Bobby Jones and MacDonald Smith recovered from Friday's slump the last of the trio equaling the course record of 68 by taking two off par on each nine. Hagen went out in 34, two under par.

In the meantime, Mehlhorn, starting with a six, did not do so well to maintain his two-stroke lead. The van was taken temporarily by Joe Turnesa, of New York, who scored a good 72 to total 217 for 54 holes.

Jones finished with a sub par 71 to total 220 and stand momentarily in second place, with Mehlhorn and Hagen still out.

Smith Shoots 68.

MacDonald Smith topped the field for the third round with a 68, equaling the course record set by Mehlhorn. Despite his bad 82 on the first round, he had a total of 226 for 54 holes, only nine strokes behind the temporary leader.

Smith's card:

In .....444 644 434—34—68

Smith got six birdies and was over par one stroke only on two holes.

Walter Hagen finished the first nine in 34, two under par, making a gain on the leaders. He was hitting the ball well, bagging two birdies. He used an iron from the tee on some of the more treacherous holes. Mehlhorn was one over fours at the end of the sixth.

The greatest disaster in a scoring way thus far recorded was a nine by Al Espionsa, of Chicago, who was tied for eighth place at 150. He put two balls out of bounds on the 546-yard twelfth hole and then mussed up the hole otherwise. He was even fours except for the Waterloo.

Bobby's Morning Round.

Bobby Jones started out on the first 18 holes Saturday with the same rhythmic form as ever. He sailed his drive straight and true down the first fairway and his second was on, seven yards away. He missed the putt and was down in four.

Jones got into trouble with his drive on No. 2. It found the rough to the right of the fairway, and he had a bad second to the left of the green. He seemed nervous, and that cheery Jones smile was absent. He appeared tired. With a knoll between him and the pin, he laid four yards from the pin on the third. He missed his putt, taking a five.

He returned to par figures on the third when his second landed 12 yards from the pin and he narrowly missed his putt, taking a four.

Driving into a strong wind on the fourth, his ball landed eight yards from the pin, and he missed the putt, getting a par three.

His second shot, a fine, long brassie, was five yards from the pin on the par four fifth hole. He sank the putt for a birdie three.

Fourteen yards from the pin with his second shot on No. 6, he missed the long putt and sank the fourth for another birdie.

His drive was straight and long on the seventh, but his second left him a foot from the green. His approach was three feet from the pin, and he was down in four.

A good drive and a fine second put him on the green in eight. He missed his approach putt, but holed out in four, bagging another birdie.

On the short ninth, par three, Bobby's tee shot skirted from the lip of a trap and rolled in. He was a bit careful in getting out and was 15 feet short. Two putts gave him a four, one over par.

Shoots a 35.

Bobby 35 at the turn, one under par. Using an iron from the tee on the 394-yard par 4 tenth, to avoid the bristling rough, Bobby shot truly and laid his second 15 feet from the pin. Two putts for a par 4.

He was short with his approach, but laid the third dead, and holed out for a par 4.

Playing wood and iron with directness, Bobby laid his third shot a foot from the pin on the long par 5 twelfth and holed out for a birdie.

He got to mishandling his putter on the thirteenth. He was on in two, but took three more to hole out for a five, one over par.

Bobby went one over par again on the short fourteenth, taking a 4 when both his drive and approach were short. He was putting badly.

Short on 16th.

He did everything according to formula on the par 4 fifteenth and marked a 4—a true drive second on the green and two putts.

Handling his driver gingerly, Jones was short on the sixteenth with his tee shot, and pulled his second to the rough.

He laid the third dead, however, and went home in 4 par figures. He missed a birdie on the short seventeenth, when his putt rimmed the cup while the gallery expressed its sympathy by sundry noises and movements. He had dropped his tee shot dead. A par 3 for the hole.

Whaling his drive off No. 18 tee with characteristic Jones exactness, Bobby bagged another birdie when he laid his second, using an iron, on the edge of the green. His approach was deadly accurate and he holed out the putt. Score for the last nine, 36. Total for the round, 71, one under par.

Bobby Jones Wins U. S. Open Crown

on his long putt but he holed the six-footer for a perfect four.

Another bit of bad luck in putting served to rob Bobby of a birdie on the 11th. His drive was strong and his approach 25 feet from the pin and to the right. He tried for a birdie and the ball skimmed straight for the cup. Thousands of eyes counted the birdie and even Bobby made a move of confidence, but the pellet went directly through the cup and lodged three inches over on the far side. He was down for a perfect four.

A perfect approach shot dead to the pin after a terrific drive, a sizzling brassie shot left Bobby in position for a birdie four on the 12th and his iron nerve did not fail. He was down in four, picking up one of the strokes lost on the outward journey.

Probably the most beautiful recovery of the tournament was flashed before the anticipating thousands on the 13th. Bobby was safe on his drive but he hooked his second shot to the trap on the left of the gren. He walked into the trap and looked over the lie deep in the trap. First he took a deep-faced niblick from the bag in readiness for a chip shot but again looked the ground over and replaced the club taking in its stead a mashie. With this club he rolled out of the trap and dead to the pin for a perfect four when a five seemed inevitable. Thus was Bobby Jones fighting for this third major title in one year.

Two Strokes Behind.

Word reached us on this green that Turnesa had dropped two strokes and Bobby had to take off two more to win.

Then calamity loomed again when Bobby's tee shot hit a spectator and rolled to the left of the green into the rough on the fourteenth hole. His chip shot overran the cup and he was forced to take two putts for a buzzard four, his only hole over par on the back nine.

A perfect four on the fifteenth, resulting from a perfect drive, pitch and two putts was the next figure on the card and it was whispered in the gallery that Turnesa had finished with a 36—even par, for the back nine and Bobby needed one birdie on the last three holes to win.

This news reached Bobby and he started the sixteenth hole by sending a tremendous drive 350 yards down the fairway and laid his pitch 25 feet over the cup but safely on. He tried nobly for a birdie here but his long putt rimmed the cup and he was forced to take a par four.

On the short seventeenth Bobby made an heroic effort to pick up the much-needed stroke when he laid his tee shot 30 feet from the pin and rimmed the cup with a beautiful putt. Again he scored a par figure with a three and went to the eighteenth green all even with Turnesa and faced by the necessity of taking a birdie on the long hole to win the championship.

Sheer nerve such as made the old-timers marvel then came to the surface in the makeup of one Bobby Jones. His tee shot was 300 yards across the wind and dead for the green. He walked to his ball much in the same manner as he might if he were engaged in a friendly match at East Lake.

The Winning Shot.

He started to take a spoon from his bag then decided to use an iron club. The shot that followed will go down in history as the winning shot in the greatest national open tourney ever held. The ball left the face of the iron with a resounding crack and soared straight to the green, struck short of the pin and rolled over the cup 15 feet beyond. The birdie four needed to win the national open championship lay within his grasp, and Bobby Jones did not fail. He missed an eagle three by scant inches and holed his last putt for a birdie four and a total of 35 for the back nine and 293 for the 72 holes. Five thousand friends of Bobby cheered for many minutes as the smiling Bobby picked up his ball and walked to the clubhouse, winner of the coveted crown.

Morning Round.

It was again the old Bobby Jones whose card showed a 35 and 36 for a 71 on the difficult Scioto course Saturday morning. He started at 9 o'clock before a huge gallery.

Bob took his par four on the first hole by laying his second shot safely on the green and taking the regular two putts.

The unlucky second hole found Bobbie in the rough at the right with his tee shot. His second shot was hooked to the long rough, a beautiful chop shot over the guardian bunker leaving him 10 feet from the pin, but his putt rimmed the cup and he took a five on the four-par hole.

This marked the beginning of Bobby's hard luck on the greens. He was shooting for birdies on seven greens, but his putts just would not fall. They rimmed the cup, they lipped the cup and went through the cup but they would not fall. His perfect shots saved the day.

The third hole came through in a four after Bob had sent his sizzling drive almost to the green and his pitch shot was up for the usual two putts. On the short fourth Bobby laid his tee shot dead on but 30 feet short of the pin and again his putt would not fall through. He tried for a birdie rather than play safely. He sunk the short putt for a perfect three.

A 325-yard drive on the long fifth sent Bob with a clear shot to the green and he laid a perfect iron shot dead to the pin and holed an eight-footer for a birdie three, bringing his score back to even par. The gallery which is always pulling for the Atlantan went wild when Bobby holed this putt to make up for the buzzard on the second.

Again a birdie came for Bobbie on the five and a par sixth. His drive was not as long as usual but his climbing brassie laid him safely on the high rolling green 30 feet from the pin. Again he took a chance and tried for an eagle three, but his putt was 18 inches from the cup, and he had to be content with a birdie, and the gallery applauded as the second putt went down, leaving Bobby one under par for the first six holes.

A beautiful drive on the seventh left Bob just short of the guardian bunker and he chipped on, but short of the pin by 25 feet. Again he was putting for a birdie but failed and took a par four.

Again on the long eighth hole Bob was just on the green with his second. He was putting for an eagle three and when his putt rimmed the cup the crowd groaned, but he was down for a birdie four, making him two under par going to the ninth. On the ninth he was again in the bunker at the right of the green, as his pitch shot failed in the wind and fell short. His explosion shot was dead on but short and his putt would not fall. He took a four for a 35, the lowest outward card made during the day to that time.

A pretty piece of strategy aided Bob on the tenth where his long driving had landed him in trouble in previous rounds. It was on this hole that he played into a water hazard yesterday and lost a stroke by penalty. Today as the gallery gasped and wondered he took an iron club from his bag on the tee and sent a screaming ball to the top of the hill in full view of the green and safe in the fairway. His strategy worked and he was safe on with his second and down for a par four.

Another par four went on his card on the 360-yard eleventh when his drive sailed 300 yards down the fairway to a beautiful lie short of the green. His pitch was good for direction but a bit short and two putts were necessary for a par four.

The nerve of Bobby Jones was again put in play on the 546-yard 12th hole. His drive was long but slightly hooked and near the rough on the left. This left a blind shot across the rough to the green, too far to reach but Bobby did not deign to play safe and sent a tremendous brassie shot over the rough and bunkers to a fine lie just short of the green. Then he laid his chip shot dead to the pin and was down for a birdie four.

On the thirteenth green Bobby took three putts for the second time since arriving at Scioto and was forced to card a buzzard five on the four par hole.

His spoon shot against the rising wind on 238-yard 14th was just short of the open and his chip shot failed to top a rise in the green. Two putts were necessary and he took a buzzard found on the par three hole.

Following a terrific drive on the 15th, Bobby pitched short of the pin and took the regular two putts for a perfect four.

On the 418-yard sixteenth Bobby again left his driver in the bag and played safely down the crooked fairway with an iron. His pitch was in the rough at the left of the green and it looked like another buzzard but Bobby figured otherwise and laid his chip shot dead to the pin for an easy par four. This was as fine as the gallery could possibly ask.

On the short seventeenth Bobby was again shooting for a birdies but his tee shot, while on the green, was 35 feet short of the pin and his putt went through the cup and he took a par three.

His long drive and equally long brassie on the par five eighteenth enabled him to take a birdie four to end the round, 35-36 for a 71.

"A MODEST, GENEROUS GOLFER"

The following is an excerpt from the London Times, June 26, announcing Bobby Jones' victory in the British open golf championship, containing a tribute not only to Bobby's mastery of the game, but his splendid sportsmanship:

"The admirers of other generations will not, I hope, quarrel seriously with the opinion that no greater, and no more accomplished, golfer has ever won a British championship. Certainly, and this is perhaps more to the point, no more modest or generous golfer has ever won one. I will hazard one other opinion, and it is the highest compliment that I can pay to Mr. Jones' technical skill. I do not think, even though he won, that he was seen at his best, and I feel almost sure that in his own heart he was not satisfied with his game. He sets himself a terribly high standard, and he did not quite live up to it, but he played well enough to beat everybody else, and he is the best golfer in the world today."

Crackers Facing Test With League Leaders

Playing a much better brand of baseball than at any time this season and with more than half of the Southern league schedule already in the 1926 record books, Manager Bert Niehoff's Atlanta Crackers face their hardest test and a hard series of road games with Memphis, Little Rock, New Orleans, Mobile and Nashville in that order during the remaining days of July. Atlanta will not play on Spiller field again until July 27, when Nashville will be the opponent.

Atlanta's play during the next few weeks will determine whether or not the Crackers have more than a mere chance at the 1926 Southern league pennant. July will also tell whether or not the Pels enter the final stretch of the pennant race as favorites.

Playing Improved.

The playing of the entire Atlanta team during the past three weeks was very much improved and another two weeks of real consistent playing will place the Crackers in the thick of the fight for first place. Atlanta is at present in fifth place, only a few points behind Nashville in fourth place, and only about 10 games behind first place.

Pitching and pinch hitting have been features of the Crackers' play during there present drive. Every member of the pitching staff has given his best and only in very few cases has the hurling faltered. Pinch hitting, with Niehaus, Griffith, Haas, Durocher and Manager Niehoff playing the leading roles, has played an all important part in the Atlanta victories of late, as has the excellent fielding.

One bright feature of the final few games with New Orleans was the double victory Monday by the Crackers. The two games were played before one of the largest holiday crowds of the past four years and a total of 17,290 fans witnessed the games. The afternoon crowd was numbered at 11,029.

In the next few games Atlanta has a chance to get a firm grip on one of the first division places and an extra good winning streak will place the locals in the thick of the pennant hunt.

Dizzy Pace for Pels.

New Orleans has set a dizzy pace during the early part of the season but during the past two weeks the Gilbert clan has had some rough sailing, losing three straights to Birmingham and then dropped a Fourth of July doubleheader to the Crackers.

Manager Gilbert's Pels likewise face an unusually hard schedule with Chattanooga, Nashville, Atlanta, Memphis and Birmingham on the July schedule and the majority of those games are on foreign soil.

Atlanta will face its greatest opportunity to knock the Pels from their lofty perch on July 18, 19, 20 and 21 in Pelicanville, in a series which will probably determine the real finishing strength of the locals.

N. C. GRIDDERS FACING HARD 1926 SCHEDULE

Chapel Hill, N. C., July 10.—(Special.)—The University of North Carolina football team has scheduled nine games for the 1926 season and four of them will be at home, according to the complete schedule as announced here today by Charles T. Woollen, graduate manager of athletics. It is a hard schedule.

Several important changes have been made in the schedule. The University of Tennessee will replace Mercer university, and North Carolina State will be played in Chapel Hill instead of in Raleigh during fair week. University of Tennessee, which last year ranked high among southern conference teams, is this year expected to have a team even stronger than last season's.

Open Away From Home.

The season will open on September 25, when Wake Forest will be met in Wake Forest. A week later the Tar Heels will play the University of Tennessee in Knoxville, Tenn. The next two games—one with the University of South Carolina on October 9, and the other with Duke on October 16, will be played at home, to be followed by a game with the University of Maryland at College Park, Md., on October 23.

This year for the first time in many years the annual Carolina-N. C. State clash will take place in Chapel Hill on October 30, instead of during fair week in Raleigh. The strong V. M. I. team will be met the following week, also in Chapel Hill. The annual Davidson game will be played in Davidson on November 13, and the game with the University of Virginia in Charlottesville on Thanksgiving day will close the season.

The complete schedule follows:

September 25, Wake Forest at Wake Forest.
October 2, University of Tennessee at Knoxville, Tenn.
October 9, University of South Carolina at Chapel Hill.
October 16, Duke at Chapel Hill.
October 23, Univeristy of Maryland at College Park, Md.
October 30, N. C. State at Chapel Hill.
November 6, V. M. I. at Chapel Hill.
November 13, Davidson at Davidson.
November 25, University of Virginia at Charlottesville.

PETE LATZO PROVES WORTH AS CHAMPION

New York, July 10.—Pete Latzo is one fistic idol to prove emphatically that he has not feet of clay.

So many of the pedestals erected by the boxing public for their favorites lately have crumpled at the first assault, that it was no great surprise to find the crowd at Newark the other night yelling wildly for Willie Harmon to knock out the new welterweight king.

It was the Scranton boy who did the knocking out, flattening Harmon with a one-two punch to the button in the fifth round. And the manner of Latzo's victory proved conclusively that he will go a long way in defense of his title.

The champion is a student of boxing, beyond a doubt. The fact that he always turns the tables on boxers who beat him proves that. No man ever beat Pete Latzo twice, and none who beat him failed to lose to him in a return engagement.

Harmon dropped Latzo at Newark some years ago, and won a newspaper decision. Pete came back and outpointed Willie at Scranton. Their bout last week was a "rubber" affair.

The New York Italian, whose only chance to win the title was to stop Latzo, showed more aggressiveness in the first two rounds than he usually displays, and had the crowd in an uproar. Latzo, they screamed, was just another of these overrated fighters—a Goldstein, Stribling or Shade.

Many have been the boxing upsets this year, and here, cried the crowd, was Harmon licking Latzo all over the place.

But the placid Pete was merely feeling out his man, content to wait. In the fourth round, the champion cut loose with assorted body punishment which made Harmon curl up and quit. In the fifth, Latzo nearly broke his opponent in two, and then shot home a right to the jaw which rocked Willie to sleep for three full minutes.

Cap. Broad Wins Airplane Race

Hendon, England, July 10.—(AP)—Captain Hubert S. Broad, who represented Great Britain in the competition for the Schneider trophy last fall, won the annual airplane race for the king's cup, which started here yesterday. Only five of the original 15 starters finished.

Lieutenant Scholefield came second only 16 seconds behind the winner. The distance was about 1,464 miles, and the handicap was so arranged that the small machines making a low average per hour had an equal opportunity with the high-power machines.

Captain Broad drove Sir Charles Wakefield's 27-horsepower moth. His average speed was 90.4 miles, considered a wonderful performance for such a small machine. Lieutenant Scholefield drove a 450-horsepower Vickers, making an average speed of 142 miles an hour. But he was not able to overcome the handicap which had been allowed the smaller airplanes.

Senators Release Jeans to Barons

Washington, July 10.—(AP)—Tex Jeanes, one of Washington's numerous outfielders, has been released to the Birmingham Southern Association club. He was purchased from Birmingham late last season.

Qualifying Play Set For Brookhaven Club Wednesday Morning

BY ROY E. WHITE.

With golf as the principal sport subject in the southern states, more especially since Bobby Jones won the national open championship and added it to his British open and American amateur crowns, ambitious young Georgia golfers who have not attained such dizzy heights as yet will turn their attention this week to the sixth annual Georgia state amateur golf championship tournament which will be held on the Brookhaven Country club course.

Qualifying rounds in the tourney will be played Wednesday, while the first rounds of match play will start Thursday afternoon.

Gene Cook, popular young East Lake golfer, will defend his title against one of the strongest fields that has ever entered a state tourney. Many young golfers who have been practicing daily for the past two months, in preparation for the event, will flock into Atlanta today from all parts of the state and participate in the mammoth welcome and reception for Bobby Jones. Following the big celebration, Georgia golfers will settle down to three days' practice before the qualifying rounds.

Everything Ready.

Members of the Georgia State Golf association, including Lowry Arnold, president; Fielding Wallace, of Augusta, vice president, and Lloyd Parks, secretary, announced Saturday night that everything is in readiness for the tourney. Local directors of the Georgia association, under whose direction the tourney will be played, are Veasey Rainwater, Tom Paine, Keith Conway and R. H. Martin. The tournament will be sponsored by the Capital City club.

Watts Gunn, Bobby Jones' running mate and partner during the recent invasion of England and runner-up to Gene Cook last year, will arrive from Columbus, Ohio, today at noon and may be one of the entries for the 1926 tourney.

Entrants in the Georgia state tourney will be allowed to practice on the Brookhaven course, starting this afternoon at 1 o'clock, it was announced. The Brookhaven course will be closed Wednesday to golfers not entered in the tourney.

Trophies for the tournament will be on exhibit at Maier & Berkele, Inc., 31 Whitehall street, during the entire week. R. H. Martin, of the Martin-Nash Motor company, has donated a perpetual trophy which will go each year to the winner of the state title, to be held until another tournament is played. It will be the first time that the new trophy will be contested for.

The Bourne Cup.

Another of the handsome trophies which will be awarded to the winner Saturday night will be the handsome A. S. Bourne cup, presented by a well-known Augusta sportsman. The Bourne trophy will become the permanent property of the club winning the title three times and both Druid Hills and East Lake clubs have two legs on the cup. A merry battle between those two clubs is predicted during the 1926 tournament.

Additional prizes and awards will be given to winners and runners-up in each of the various flights it was announced Saturday. The list of trophies and awards this year is the most elaborate ever offered for a Georgia state tournament.

In addition to the various Atlanta clubs, teams and players have signified their intention of entering from Augusta, Savannah, Columbus, Macon, Valdosta, Thomasville, Griffin, LaGrange, Athens and others. South Georgia has a number of outstanding golfers, notable among them being the four Olivers, of Valdosta, and Scotie Beverly, of Thomasville.

Officials of the club have requested that entries be listed as early as possible in order to ascertain the number of flights necessary. It is expected that ten flights will be filled, though more will be formed if that number is exceeded. There is room for all, according to Mr. Martin.

Players may file entries with Lloyd Parks, at Parks-Chambers-Hardwick company; C. W. Menton, superintendent of the Capital City club, or R. H. Martin, at the Martin-Nash Motor company.

Transportation Facilities.

Special arrangements are being made by the committee in charge of the tournament to transport the visiting men from their hotels to the club grounds. Those who take street cars will be met at the car line by the bus and taken to the clubhouse.

Officers of the tournament will be entertained at a dinner-dance at the roof garden of the Capital City club Thursday evening by J. L. Dickey, Jr. Visitors will be issued courtesy cards by the club in order that they may attend the dance and other entertainments being planned.

Howard Beckett, professional at course, has been at Columbus for several days participating in the national open tourney, but the course has been one over and pronounced ready for the practice rounds the early part of this week.

The Brookhaven course is one of the prettiest in the country and has been the scene of frequent tournaments in the past. It is a par 71 and has an abundance of rolling hills and tactfully located sand traps.

Par for the course is as follows:

Out ..... 443 543 535—36
In ..... 343 443 455—35—71

Chicago, July 10.—(AP)—Harold (Red) Grange, financier of the gridirons, will return to his humble job as town iceman in Wheaton, Ill., August 1.

C. C. Pyle, Grange's manager, said today that it was not a play for publicity, but that Grange wanted six weeks of he-man labor to condition himself for the opening of the football season.

Chickasaws Stage Late Rally To Defeat Crackers

Spurt in Last Frame Gives Memphis Clan Hard Game, 5 to 2

Memphis, Tenn., July 10.—(Special.)—This is a tale of a three-base hit that might have been a bunt and this might have been a different tale. But we stick to our original tale of the three-base hit. For around that three-base hit that wasn't a bunt is woven the tale of how the Chicks defeated the Crackers today, 5 to 2, and how Hollis McLaughlin fell by the wayside in the eighth inning of a duel of pitching with Richard Bonnelly.

As we are able to type this tale of the three base hit and a Chick victory, we arise and proclaim the Chickasaws the sole owner of second place. The Barons vacated their rights of position by losing to the Travelers in 10 innings and thereby broke an existing tie for the runner-up position.

Robert Barrett, third baseman of the tribe was at bat when there came about the transformation of a bunt into a three base hit and the breaking of a one to one tie that had existed during a masterful pitching duel between Bonnelly and McLaughlin. The duel really started in the second inning as each team scored in the first inning.

Gets Lucky Grounder.

This was the situation when Robert Barrett came to bat. Turner Barber had secured a lucky hit on a grounder that took a weird hop and hurdled over Gilbert at third. Barrett had wasted two strikes in an ineffectual effort to bunt. They were the only two balls McLaughlin had thrown. McLaughlin shot another one and it seemed to be straight over. Barrett took his swing and the ball went soaring far and fast to right center out of the reach of Haas or Good. Barber easily scored and Barrett easily made third base. That was the three base hit that staggered McLaughlin instead of a bunt that might have been enacted with McLaughlin remaining cool and collected. Tommy Taylor followed with a sizzling liner to center for a double and Barrett scored. Ray Schmandt crashed one through Durocher's defense at short and Taylor went to third. Reese singled to right, scoring Taylor and putting Schmandt on third. That was the end of McLaughlin. Ruel Love took up the pitching. Ed Cousineau grounded to short and Schmandt was caught in a chase. In the meantime Reese had passed second and was headed to third. Schmandt got back to third but Reese was on the base and Reese was called out as the base belonged to Schmandt. Schmandt scored on a sacrifice fly to right by Bonnelly and Jenkins flied to center to end the inning.

Opportunity had knocked at the door of the Chicks since the first inning. In fact opportunity had fairly battered at the door of the tribe. On the other hand opportunity had presented itself but a few times to the Crackers and two of these times were blocked by a pair of sensational double plays by the Chick infield.

The Crackers scored in the first when it seemed a pendulating plate would be the undoing of Bonnelly. He walked Durocher and Niehoff. Haas forced Niehoff. Griffith singled, scoring Durocher. Schmandt made a pretty stop of Good's sizzling grounder and threw to Jenkins, forcing Griffith. Jenkins returned the throw to first with Bonnelly covering to complete the double play.

Chicks Tie Count.

The Chicks tied it in their half. With one out Klugman doubled over Griffith's head in left. Barber lined out to Griffith. Barrett singled to center scoring Klugman and took second on the throw in, but Taylor lifted to second. Only in one inning, the fifth, when he walked Luebbe with one out, did more than three men face Bonnelly from the second until the eighth. Another spectacular double play stopped the Crackers in the sixth. Durocher singled to open the inning and Niehoff sacrificed. Haas grounded to Jenkins, who tossed to Barrett and Durocher was in a chase. Klugman got in the play and threw to Jenkins who ran down Durocher before he could get back to second. Haas had started for second but hesitated before touching the bag. Jenkins then gave chase to Haas, who had started back to first. Jenkins tossed to Schmandt and Haas was out.

The third hit off Bonnelly was a double by Luebbe with one out in the eighth, but McLaughlin popped to Cousineau and Durocher struck out.

The Chicks presented the Crackers a run in the ninth when, for a while, it seemed that the presentation might have been somewhat out of order. Niehoff walked. He was permitted to steal second and third. Haas went out on a grounder. Griffith singled, scoring Niehoff. Good singled and things looked more complicated. Both advanced on Niehaus' out on a grounder to Schmandt but there was a relief when Gilbert popped out to Klugman and the curtain dropped.

Just when it seemed one run more would look mighty big with the manner in which McLaughlin and Bonnelly were pitching, the Chicks failed to grasp two glaring opportunities. Barrett singled to open the sixth and Taylor sacrificed. Barrett took third on Schmandt's infield out. Reese was hit by McLaughlin but Cousineau grounded out short to first.

Bonnelly Awakes.

Dick Bonnelly awoke from an apparent drama of victory with himself in the role of the hero only to find that he had slumbered away a chance for the Chicks in the seventh. Bonnelly get off the inning with a prodigious clout to left for two bases. The scenery was all set for Jenkins to sacrifice.

McLaughlin had made one pitch out. McLaughlin had started to resume his position in the box and Bonnelly had worked far off second. McLaughlin wheeled and threw to Durocher and Bonnelly was run down with Gilbert making the putout.

A brilliant piece of fielding by Durocher prevented the Chicks from breaking through in the fourth. With two out Reese walked and Niehoff misjudged Cousineau's loft back of second. Durocher went directly back of second to take Bonnelly's seemingly sure hit and toss it to second to force Cousineau. Tom Rogers for the Crackers and Clarence Griffin or Guy Morton for the Chicks were the overnight pitching selections for Sunday's game that will start at 3:30 o'clock.

Joe Wright, Jr., Makes Debut as Race Sculler

Joe Wright, Jr., son of the famous Argonaut Rowing club, Toronto, stroke oar, made his debut as a sculler in the recent Schuylkill navy regatta in Philadelphia and won a race impressively as a junior and had a row-over in the intermediate class. He is wearing the colors of the Penn A. C., which his father coaches, and if he can devote his time to sculling, promises, in the not distant future, to make Walter Hoover, who is the national champion and a member of a rival Schuylkill navy club, the Undine Barge club, hustle to reton his laurels.

RED SOX, TIGERS SPLIT BILL.

Boston, July 10.—The Red Sox and Tigers split even in their double-header today. In the first ten-inning affair, which Boston won, 6 to 5, the winning run resulted from O'Rourke's error, Todt's sacrifice and an intentional pass to Jacobson, and Bratche's rolling single to right.

In the second game, Detroit's, by 4-to-2, the Tigers took three runs off Wiltze in the first three innings. Ruffing, who succeeded him, held the visitors to four hits for the balance of the game and struck out 10 men.

New York, July 10.—The New York Yankees wrested a 4-to-3 victory from Cleveland in 12 innings today, Gehrig's single with the bases full, driving home Paschal with the winning run. Tris Speaker was responsible for all the scoring of the Indians, sending two runs across the plate and registering with a circuit smash. Berlenbach Plans New Attack on Delaney

Coming Ring Battle Will See Real Fight Between Old Rivals

BY ROBERT EDGREN.

"Is Paul Berlenbach punching as hard as he used to?" was asked of Dan Hickey, Paul's manager and coach—the man who took Paul from the amateur wrestling mat and made him a world's champion in the ring.

"Certainly," said Hickey. "He's punching harder because he's placing his punches better. You'll see a different hitting machine in the ring when Paul meets Jack Delaney on the fifteenth. I expect Paul to win decisively this time, and I'll be surprised if the fight goes the limit."

"The test of a hard puncher is what he can do with his punch," Hickey went on.

"The hardest puncher I've ever seen was Peter Maher. Peter was the hardest hitter in the world about 30 years ago. He could hit you on the heel and nearly break your neck. Bob Fitzsimmons and Maher came up at the same time and both went after the heavyweight championship. You remember Jim Corbett tried to retire and give Peter the title, and Bob knocked Peter out, so Corbett came back as champion and was knocked out by Bob himself. Peter Maher was a harder puncher than Fitzsimmons, but look over the old record books and compare the list of men knocked out by Fitz and the list of men knocked out by Maher, and you'd think Maher's punch was nothing beside Bob's. Bob was a student. He'd spend months perfecting a punch. He never had to guess what would happen when he let one go. "Maher came near knocking Fitzsimmons out when they fought across the Mexican line. He landed a wallop on Bob and Bob went down for nine seconds, and got up so groggy he could hardly stand. Yet a little later he knocked Maher out.

"Fitzsimmons was the most accurate puncher I've ever seen. That's why he was such a great knockout artist. There were a few others who could hit harder, but nobody else had Bob's perfect judgment of timing and placing. Bob always knew exactly where to land a punch to win, and he could do it even when he was reeling and half out himself. Bob had a name for being tricky, pretending to be groggy, and then slipping over a knockout punch. That wasn't all trickiness. Bob fooled them a little, but several times he was worse off than he looked, and still he won with a knockout. Gus Ruhlin nearly knocked Bob's head off, and Bob reeled out and sunk his glove in Ruhlin's ribs for a clean one-punch knockout when everybody thought he was beaten and the gamblers were offering ten to one, with no takers, that Fitz wouldn't last another round."

Different Proposition.

"I've been teaching Berlenbach to place his punches accurately, like old Fitz. When Paul started he had a natural knack of hitting and he could hit hard, but he wasn't always as accurate as he might have been. He's developed a lot in the past few months, and I might say that in my opinion he has become one of the most accurate punchers we have today, and hasn't lost any of his early hitting power. He's a much better hitter than when he met Delaney before, in either fight.

"Delaney is a hard hitter, but not a crushing puncher like some I've seen. He gets his effect with perfect placing, and Paul and I can both appreciate how well Delaney can get a blow over. Paul was watching him last time, and still he slipped over a couple that dropped Paul. This next time, I think, it will be a different proposition. Paul knows more about placing punches accurately himself, and if anyone goes down I think it's likely to be Delaney.

"There's been a lot of talk about Risko's outpunching Paul. I don't want to take anything away from Risko—he put up a surprisingly good fight against Paul. But the first knockdown was more or less an accident. From his first fight Paul has always fought in one way. He has gone straight out after his man from the first bell. The other fellows always gave ground and Paul followed them. It had become almost a habit—to expect the other fellow to back up. Risko didn't back up an inch. He stepped right into Paul and let go a wild swing that caught Paul on the chin and dropped him. It was the same way Firpo dropped Dempsey to his knees with the first punch.

"That was when I learned that Paul was a real champion. He was barely able to get up, and he was practically out on his feet for four rounds. Yet he lasted through, and toward the end had Risko groggy and I don't think my judgment is wrong when I say he could have finished Risko in two or three rounds more. If he fights Risko again he'll win quickly."

Will Soon Be Ready.

"Berlenbach is growing heavier, and before long his natural fighting weight will be 185 pounds. At that weight, with his endurance, courage and punch and the skill he's developing at placing punches, I think he'll be a match for any heavyweight in the world. Dempsey, Tunney, Wills or any of them. That weight, 185 pounds, is enough for a heavyweight. Heavier men as a rule haven't the speed. Jeffries was the one great exception. Jeffries was a wonderful fighter, with his great weight and strength, and his fast legs, and Jeffries had the knack of placing his punches. He didn't waste many blows in a fight, although of course he didn't equal Fitzsimmons in that. If he'd been as perfect in placing blows as Fitz nobody could have stood up before him for a round.

"Of the great heavyweights, Fitzsimmons weighed less than 160 pounds in his best fighting days. Corbett weighed 185 as champion. His weight at Carson, when he fought Fitzsimmons, was given out as 183 pounds. Tom Sharkey weighed 182 to 185. Tom was like Peter Maher—not much for accuracy, but packing a wallop that would drop you if it landed anywhere near the right spot. Maher was of about the same weight. Sullivan at his best weighed no more than 185 pounds stripped. When he was fighting at 200 to 205 pounds he carried a lot of fat. Sullivan had the knack of placing a right-hand punch on the chin, and it was a corker! Few of them were like Bob Fitzsimmons, able to hit any kind of a blow with either hand, placed perfectly and with knockout force. When Jack Dempsey won the championship from Willard, Jack weighed 183 pounds.

"I expect to see Berlenbach win the heavyweight championship. He's a match for any of them in gameness, strength and hitting ability. He will soon be as heavy as Dempsey was at his best, and he is improving steadily in accuracy of hitting. To my mind the last quality is the most important. Watch him against Delaney and you'll see an improved fighter who's going to improve as much more in the coming year as he has in a year past. I've seen too many fighters since the days of Dan Creedon and Frank Slavin and Peter Jackson and John L. Sullivan to be over-enthusiastic, but I think Paul is looking more like the great old-timers than any fighter I've seen since Bob Fitzsimmons' time."

Ausborne, with two hits each, led the stick work for the winners, while R. Boyd and Pirkle showed up best for Scottdale Mills.

EIGHT TITLES ARE AT STAKE AT TRAPSHOOT

Dayton, Ohio, July 10.—(AP)—Eight North American trapshooting championships will be decided at the 27th Grand American championship and handicap tournament at the Amateur Trapshooting Association of America headquarters at Vandalia, near here, August 23 to 28.

Six hundred competitors are expected inasmuch as increased interest in trapshooting is declared to have been evinced since last year when 528 individuals participated. Besides scores of trophies and medals to be awarded winners and placers in the various events, $1,000 is guaranteed the winner of the handicap event.

The feature events of the meet will be contests for: The clay target championship of North America; the women's championship; the junior championship; the class championship; the double target championship; the women's double target championship; the zone five-man team championship; the grand American handicap. There will be several preliminary events.

The Grand American handicap was won last year by E. C. Stauer, Ithaca, N. Y., with a score of 98 out of 100 targets at 17 yards.

Claude Olney, West Allis, Wis., won the double targets title in 1925, with a score of 191 out of 200.

The clay target championship was captured by S. Crothers, Philadelphia, Pa., with a perfect score of 200.

The tournament is being held for the third consecutive year at the new national headquarters on the National road west of Vandalia.

Girl Stars Break Four A. A. U. Records At Philadelphia Meet

Philadelphia, July 10.—(By the Associated Press.)—Lillian Copeland, of the Pasadena Athletic and Country club, today defied the rays of a torrid sun and won three championships in the A. A. U. women's track and field meet, enabling her home club to retain its team title, won last year.

In landing the three individual championships, Miss Copeland established three new American records. She put the eight-pound shot 38 feet 3 3-4 inches; tossed the javelin 112 feet 5 1-2 inches and threw the discus 101 feet 1 inch. The discus record was established by her yesterday in the trials.

The former records were 106 feet 9 3-4 inches for the javelin; 36 feet 11 3-4 inches for the shot put, and 98 feet 2 inches for the discus.

Fourth Record Falls.

A fourth American women's record was shattered when Catherine Maguire, of the Paterson, N. J., recreation center, leaped 4 feet 11 1-3 inches in the high jump. The former record was 4 feet 10 7-8 inches, made by Katherin Lee, Chicago, 1923.

Through the uncanny ability of Miss Copeland to garner points the Pasadena club won the team point trophy with 26 points; Northern California Athletic club, which was competing under protest, was third with 16 points; Toronto Ladies' club, 13; Paterson Recreation center, 10; Coliseum Athletic club, St. Louis, 8; Meadowbrook club, Philadelphia, 7; Brooklyn Edison, Boston Swimming and Prudential Athletic clubs, Newark, N. J., 3 each; Y. W. C. A. Girls' club, Detroit, 2, and McGill university, 1.

Rosa M. Grosse, of the Toronto Ladies' club, won the 100-yard dash by defeating Miss Helen Filkey, of the Midwest Athletic club, Chicago, in the fast time of 11 8-10 seconds.

Corking Good Show For Ring Fans Here At City Auditorium

Fans who visit the auditorium Tuesday night to sit in at the big all-star boxing presentation of the Gate City A. C. will find there will be no difficulty in keeping cool, according to Matchmaker Herbert Watson, who avows for the ice cold atmosphere that pervades the big playhouse.

When the bouts begin, however, and the young men begin swinging gloves, Mr. Watson is not so sure the cooling system will be of any particular good.

"They're bound to get worked up over those bouts," Watson remarked Saturday. "It's going to be the best show we've held here yet."

The Gate City director was delighted over the indications that point to a highly successful evening, financially and otherwise. The arrival of Chick Miller, of Chicago, in prime condition for his struggle against Hollis Sullivan in a 10-round event, lent added confidence. This is the bout that Watson expects to carry off the honors Tuesday night, though he insists that the two other 10-rounders—Mickey Kendrick vs. Benny Reagan, and Sid Taylor vs. Dave Eddleman—will be equally as interesting and just as hard-fought.

Real Opener.

As for the battle royal opener, he is absolutely certain that will be a pleaser.

Hollis Sullivan is stepping out this time. He has been whipping everybody placed against him with a certain degree of ease, latest of whom were Lou Guglielmini and Baby Stribling. This time his skill will be pitted against that of the former sparring partner of Benny Leonard, a chap who has been wise enough to pick up pointers from the old lightweight master and is regarded as one of the toughest men available for the Marietta hope.

Among those known to Atlanta fans that Miller has fought are Freddie Boorde, Jordan Sheppard, Babe Asher, Artie McCann, Al Ziemer, Tommy Jones, Stewart McLean and Herbie Schaeffer.

Sullivan's marked success in local rings has given rise to the belief that he is almost unbeatable by featherweights in this part of the country. So, just to see if it was possible, Matchmaker Watson went out of this territory to land a worthy opponent for him.

The Reagan-Kendrick match has the earmarks of being a great battle. Benny, in three bouts with the Columbus boy, has never been able to beat him, earning two draws and losing one decision. That is sufficient proof that Watson is giving him no "set-up."

Top-Notcher.

As for Sid Taylor and Dave Eddleman, that should rank right along with the above matches. Taylor has done very little fighting in Atlanta, his home town, but he has a string of successes to his credit in other southern cities. He recently fought a slashing draw with Spike Webb, a tough Mobile boy, in a Greenville ring. Also recently he extended Larry Avera to the limit to win a decision over him.

All of those facts, and more, point to a stirring series of bouts Tuesday evening and, with ladies admitted free, low prices prevailing and the disabled American veterans drawing down a share of the proceeds, there should be a house in keeping with the show offered.

PLANS TAYLOR BATTLE WITH ROSENBERG

BY WALTER ECKERSALL.

With boxing legalized in Illinois and the commission machinery working satisfactorily, promoters are looking around for talent for outdoor shows.

Jim Mullen, promoter of the Mandell-Kansas charity bout last week, is planning a bantamweight championship bout between Charley Phil Rosenberg, the titleholder, and Bud Taylor, of Terre Haute, Ind. Mullen expects to put on this show the latter part of the month, and July 24 is the tentative date.

Comish Bars Heavyweights.

In arranging this match Mullen is complying with the wish of the commission, which does not care to have promoters put on bouts between heavyweights until the game is on a firm basis in the state. Mullen plans to use Pete Latzo, the welterweight champion, against a strong opponent. Mullen is eager to sign fighters who are not afraid to lead and who are willing to take a punch to land one. He is opposed to hand picked opponents and he already has blacklisted managers who wanted to bring their fighters to Chicago but reserved the right to name their opponents.

Mullen, who owns a gymnasium in Chicago, believes he has a great prospect for the flyweight title in Ernie Peters, who is under the management of Sam Plan. This little fighter's manager is experiencing trouble in finding opponents for Ernie, who has been meeting fighters six to ten pounds heavier.

Gasparo After Welter Honors.

Dan Gasparo, an Italian welterweight who met Shuffle Callahan, of Chicago Heights, in the semi-windup to the Kansas-Mandell fight, is a rugged contender for the 147-pound championship. Dan is fast and can hit with his right hand. He is even a better defensive fighter than offensive.

Then there is Russell Whalen, who has been taught the manly art by Dave Barry, a great fighter in his day. Whalen has been doing a lot of fighting in the east recently and is looked upon as an excellent lightweight prospect, according to Mullen and Barry. Even Jimmy Daugherty, the referee who handled Whalen in his eastern fights, predicts a bright future for the Chicago lightweight.

Winn After Series Of Horse Races

Cincinnati, July 10.—(AP)—Colonel Matt J. Winn, general manager of the Kentucky Jockey club, announced that he was negotiating for a series of international races at each of his four tracks—Latonia, Laurel, Fairmount and Lincoln fields. These races will be open to the best of the American 3-year-olds and upward over distance and for the foreign breds which are expected to make an invasion of this country during the fall of the year. Tempting stakes will be offered and Winn now is awaiting word from Joseph E. Widener, who went abroad a month ago to arrange the details for an invasion by Europe's best thoroughbreds.

Colonel Winn announced that Lincoln fields will open on August 7. It is just 30 miles from Chicago. The plant is owned by the Kentucky Jockey club with some Chicago affiliations.

McGraw Sings Praises Of Tristram Speaker

Tris Speaker, the grizzled Texan, is a little grayer this year than last, but still one of the game's three greatest fielders. At least John Joseph McGraw, who may regain the title of master mind again this summer, thinks so. John Joseph saw "Spoke" in action for the second time this spring. And John Joseph remarked as "Spoke" grabbed a fly, "I would rather have Speaker on this ball club than any outfielder in the world," which is praise from Julius Caesar.

BASEBALL FIRMS ARRIVE AT STOCK-TAKING STAGE

EXPERTS TRYING TO DOPE OUT CLUBS

BY WESTBROOK PEGLER.

New York, July 10.—The major league baseball firms have now arrived at what would be known in the dry goods and notions business as inventory, or stock-taking time, for the season is half over and the rush of business has left the situation somewhat disheveled. Mid-season is merely a hot day in July for most ball teams, but for the Yankees and Giants of New York it chances to be an open date and an opportunity to meditate on such topics as fill the meditations of ball players on open dates.

The metropolitan clientele in the lack of any league engagements here for three days may examine the chances of the Giants and determine how they became so shop-worn since April and may fret, if desired, over the recent professional reverses of the Yankees. There seems to be no reason to take on about the Dodgers' condition at this time, for they started the season with a peddler's pack making change out of a leather pouch and now they are doing better than the Giants, which represents a net profit of something stupendous, and have acquired a cash register.

Gone Along Winning.

In April it would have been an insult to the Giants to predict that by mid-season they would be less prosperous than the Dodgers, for the Dodgers of April were, as intimated in these dispatches some time since, just a lot of guys named Joe and possessed of exactly one pitcher named Dazzy Vance. Since then this Vance has been what you might properly describe as a bust, but the Dodgers have gone along winning ball games and they now discover themselves seriously implicated in the competition for the season's prize money.

There is a mild feeling of alarm here in New York because the Yankees lead over the field has been reduced to eight ball games, which is somewhat the same as worrying because Mr. Kellogg, of Battle Creek, had lost a corn flake. A lead of eight ball games in mid-season is not negotiable for a pennant, but it is generally regarded as a nice asset, so the misgivings of the local customers would seem to be premature.

The fact is that the Yankees came up from Florida to compete in a league which suddenly seemed to decline from major to high minor status, and with a new-found combination of violent hitters in their lineup, won a number of ball games that a team of their go-as-you-please fielding tendencies might have lost without such hitting. Of late, though, there have been games in which their hitting strength was not enough to offset their fielding weakness and now Mark Koenig, their shortstop, has benched to recover his spirit. But it required the collapse of Koenig and the injury of Bob Meusel, Babe Ruth and Waite Hoyt to bring the Yankees down to a level on which the other teams of the league can compete with them, and even now the competition is something like an assault with rose petals at 40 paces, so far removed is the New York team from the actual challenge of a rival.

Boss-Ridden Clubs.

The Giants give the impression of having gone surly, not to say bolshevik, for many a tinker has laid down his tools, climbed down the ladder and gone on strike for much less provocation than the Giants endure in their normal relations with the boss. A boss-ridden ball team, sometimes subjected to keyhole espionage and generally forbidden to exercise such intelligence as they possess, indifference to orders from the bench, the Giants never are a rollicking squad and this season they seem to have been doing their work with the spontaneity of so many bricklayers.

Whatever the reason may be, the Giants are a lack lustre entry right now and the season holds nothing for them but the promise of so much employment, if that.

British Anxious To Improve Golf

Leading British golfers are only too anxious to place their tuition services at the disposal of the British amateur team for the Walker cup.

J. H. Taylor says: "I am ready to offer my service in any capacity whatever." James Braid says: "I shall only be too pleased to be of any service to British golf."

"Sandy" Herd says: "Of course, I am willing. In my opinion our amateurs should play as many hard matches as possible with professionals. American amateurs are always striving to improve their golf in this way, and British players ought to do the same if they wish to get to the top of the tree." Harry Vardon states: "If I can be of any service I am willing to fall into line."

Other British professionals are understood to be more than ready to follow the lead of the chiefs of their vocation.

PONTIAC SIX

CHIEF · OF · THE · SIXES

At a time when price had been made the chief inducement to the purchase of a low-priced six, the Pontiac Six was introduced into that field.

Yet it won instant acceptance—first as a quality car and then as a car at a price that could only be achieved by an organization enjoying the gigantic resources and purchasing power at the disposal of the Oakland Motor Car Company, a division of General Motors.

Entirely disregarding price, the Pontiac Six would be an outstanding car by the grace of its Fisher body and the smartness of its Duco finish, by the size, power, and flexibility of its engine, by the exceptional ruggedness and "heft" of every unit, from the dashing radiator cap to the tail light—

—but a price of $825 literally throws this high-quality Six into bold and impressive relief against the entire industry.

Oakland Six, Companion to the Pontiac Six—$1025 to $1295. All prices at factory. Easy to pay on the liberal General Motors Time Payment Plan.

PUBLIC LOOKS FOR QUALITY

The American public is deciding its purchase of automobiles upon quality rather than price, according to R. H. Grant, vice president and general sales manager of the Chevrolet Motor company.

"This increasing regard for quality also is apparent in many fields other than that of the automobile," said Mr. Grant.

"For instance, a man buys a garden hose not on the basis of which hose is the cheapest, but on the basis of what service he will get for his money. If he believes that the cheaper hose will fail after a season of use, he will purchase a more expensive hose that will serve for several seasons.

"This attitude is becoming more and more apparent in the automobile industry mainly because the public, each year, is becoming more familiar with motor car values.

"In addition, in the automobile market other considerations that are influencing buyers are colors, style, performance and riding qualities.

"Buyers of necessity have to group themselves into price classes, but within the range of their price class they are very discriminating.

"Consequently, other considerations as well as price have to be given careful thought in order to make the appeal to the largest possible number of buyers in a particular price class."

LIFE HISTORY OF FIRESTONE INSPIRING

Harvey Samuel Firestone, president of the Firestone Park Trust & Savings Bank, Akron, Ohio, and of the tire manufacturing industries and subsidiaries bearing his name, was born on a farm near Columiana, Ohio, December 20, 1868.

Even as a boy his business abilities were pronounced and he soon graduated from assisting his father in the sale of cattle and horses to become at 19 years of age a traveling salesman for a Columbus extract concern. Later he became Detroit salesmanager for the Columbus Buggy works.

It was while employed with that concern that Mr. Firestone conceived the possibilities in rubber tires and within 15 years he organized and developed the largest concern in the world exclusively devoted to the manufacture of tires and tire accessories.

Employee Welfare.

Mr. Firestone early turned his attention to the welfare of his employees, which by 1915 numbered nearly 20,000. One of his first institutions was a modern bank to render complete banking service not only to his employees in the Akron factories, but to the business men of the vicinity.

Starting with comparatively few depositors and a small capital, the Firestone Park Trust and Savings bank is today one of Akron's large banking institutions with resources of more than $5,000,000 and deposits of $4,700,000. Its Christmas club paid out nearly half a million dollars in 1925.

Besides being president of the parent company, Mr. Firestone is president of its subsidiaries. The Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., Ltd., Canada; the Firestone Steel Products Co.; the Firestone-Apsley Co., Hudson, Mass.; Firestone Cotton mills, Fall River, Mass.; Kylos Rubber Co.; Akron Firestone Park Land Co., and a director of the Firestone Tire and Rubber Co., London, England.

Mr. Firestone is a past president of the Rubber Association of America. He served as a member of the Ohio council of national defense during the great war and he was instrumental in the organization of the rubber division of the war industry board.

Is Widely Known.

Mr. Firestone is a member of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, the highway educational board, the John Burroughs Memorial association and a director of the New England Historic Genealogical society.

Always taking an active interest in religious affairs and education, Mr. Firestone is president of the Ohio Federation of Churches and a warden of the First Episcopalian church in Akron. He is the donor of the Firestone university scholarship which provides a college education for the high school pupil submitting the best essay in an annual national contest.

Mr. Firestone is a member of Ohio Society of New York, the India house, New York; Detroit Athaletic club, Union club and Mayfield Country club, Cleveland; the Portage Country club and the Fairlawn Country club, University Club, City club, Akron.

WITH FRANKLIN CO.

GEORGE W. WHITE.

Announcement has just been made by officials of the Franklin Motor Car company of the appointment as retail sales representative of George W. White.

Mr. White is well known in Atlanta, where he has lived for the past 12 years, and has held positions of high station. He was formerly general manager for the Black and White Cab of Atlanta and more recently a resident of Florida, where he successfully conducted a brokerage business. He has been a Franklin owner since his first ownership of an automobile and his knowledge together with a fine personality make him well qualified for this new appointment and his addition to the sales staff of the Franklin company is a distinct asset to this well-known organization.

DENNY HEADS NEW MARMON CO. HERE

Another chapter in Atlanta's incomparable history as the center of motor car distribution of the entire south was written Saturday, when it was announced that the Atlanta Marmon Motor company, newly organized Marmon distributor, will open Monday at 444 Peachtree street. Not only will every type of machine which the company manufactures be available to patrons, but a complete service department in keeping with the high and unusual standard set by the Marmon company will be operated.

W. O. Denny, treasurer and general manager, has been identified with Marmon interests in Atlanta for many years and is regarded as the outstanding automobile executive of this section of the south. He will be actively in charge of the new plant and will personally be at the service of Atlantans and out-of-town customers. He declared Saturday that every facility for comfort and convenience will be incorporated in the new plant, and that a high type of automotive executive and expert engineers will be ready to give patrons the best service in the history of the city.

While Mr. Denny will have active supervision of the New Marmon unit here, he will have the advice and assistance of Edward M. Durant, prominent Atlanta business man, as president, and of S. D. Grant as secretary.

These two officials have been closely associated with the motor car and allied industries for many years and their experience will be of almost invaluable service in directing the destinies of the new concern, it was pointer out Saturday by leading automobile sales agents.

Every modern accessory known to the conduct of a successful service department has been added to the recently remodeled building which will house the Marmon unit in this city, it was stated by Mr. Denny, and additions will be made in order to assure Marmon drivers a superior service for this entire district.

A complete stock of all newest models of the Marmon products is now on display at the new plant and a corps of experts will be in attendance to demonstrate the mechanical perfection of the new Marmon, which local officials declare now has reached a place never before attained by the automotive industry of the world.

While the local agency will be in charge of the service station and distribution, it will have advice and experience of years of successful motor car manufacture of the parent company at Indianapolis, Mr. Denny said. The local company will keep in close touch with latest improvements in order to furnish patrons an unparalleled service.

U. S. COAST GUARD RECRUITING OFFICE TO OPEN MONDAY

Announcement of the opening of the United States coast guard recruiting office Monday at 404 Austell building, was made Saturday by Chief Pay Clerk H. D. Brownley, who will supervise the Atlanta station. Mr. Brownley recently was transferred from Norfolk, Va., where he was in charge of the recruiting office that was moved to Atlanta.

The area under the local office includes Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee and Alabama. Mr. Brownley stated that substations would be established at Macon, Augusta and Columbus, Ga., and at Montgomery and Birmingham, Ala.

Peacetime activities of the coast guard consist of the saving of life and property at sea and maintaining a patrol of the coasts. Three vessels each season are detailed to combating with the iceberg danger, forming a part of the international ice patrol. Since its establishment in 1914, no lives have been lost through collision with icebergs, Mr. Brownley said. In war this service functions with the navy.

Buckhead-Oglethorpe Express Car Petition Will Be Heard Wednesday

Hearing on a petition by patrons of the Georgia Railway and Power company asking that Oglethorpe-Buckhead cars be operated on a non-stop or express schedule will be held Monday morning at 10 o'clock before the Georgia public service commission.

The petition asks that the cars be operated on a non-stop schedule for discharging passengers from Walton street to Brookwood station outbound, and for taking on passengers from Brookwood station to Walton street inbound, with such provisions for taking on passengers for points beyond Brookwood station outbound and discharging passengers between Brookwood station and Walton street inbound as the commission may order.

Sidelights on 100-Mile Run Made by Franklins in Low Gear

"Possibly only an automobile engineer or mechanician or the motorist who takes his place as driver or as passenger in the car which starts out to do 100 miles in low gear without stopping can understand the test of cooling efficiency, reliability and stamina that this feat imposes," said S. B. Dodge, sales manager for the Franklin Motor Car company (local Franklin dealer), at the conclusion of the 100-mile low-gear run in Atlanta on Thursday, July 1.

"The engine fired more than four million times and the crankshaft revolved approximately a million and a half times during this run. To traverse the 100-mile distance in seven or eight hours it is necessary to have the engine turning over at a rate equivalent to a high-gear speed of over fifty miles an hour, continuous operation.

"While the test will be recognized in motoring circles as extreme it is staged in this case to show how far one really can go with an automobile which is air-cooled, in so far as proving stamina, reliability and cooling efficiency of the power plant is concerned, said Mr. Dodge.

He states that the Franklin factory at Syracuse was the recipient of hundreds of congratulatory messages, among them many from aviators and airplane manufacturers, all of whom are intensely interested in the development of air-cooled engines.

A Message From Byrd.

Lieutenant Richard E. Byrd, who made the notable flight from Spitzenberg to the north pole on May 9 and who was invited by the Franklin Automobile company to attend the celebration of the twenty-fifth birthday of air-cooling as guest of honor, sent the following message to President H. H. Franklin: "I am deeply grateful to you for the hospitality which you have proposed to extend to me on the twenty-fifth anniversary of your great accomplishment and I am as sincerely sorry that I cannot be with you on that date. Not only to enjoy your hospitality, but to express in person my faith in the air-cooled motor, which certainly did a great job for Bennett and myself. We have two previous engagements both of which are urgent which prevent my being with you. Best of good wishes to you and the members of your company."

In response to Commander Byrd's wire, Mr. Franklin said: "The good wishes expressed in your telegram are very much appreciated and your comments on air-cooling could come from no one who is better able to speak from experience. Your feat in reaching the north pole in an air-cooled plane is one of the automotive era's greatest accomplishments. It was for that reason that we wanted to do honor to one who had contributed so much to world knowledge."

Letters written by manufacturers of airplanes disclose something of the amazing progress being made with air-cooled engines in aviation, according to the local Franklin dealer. It is pointed out that cotton dusting for the purpose of killing boll weevil in southern states was made possible by air-cooled engines which succeeded in keeping cool despite the low altitude, the heavy loads and the conditions of high temperature under which this flying was done.

One manufacturer said: "It is generally agreed that the air-cooled motor eliminates approximately 50 per cent of the forced landings formerly due to plumbing trouble of various kinds in water-cooled motors." Still another manufacturer says that two recent notable developments in aviation, namely, the operation of the Colonial Air transport and the aeronautical branch of the Philadelphia Rapid Transit company are using air-cooled motors exclusively.

The local dealer states that over two hundred Franklin cars participated in the low-gear events, which would make 20,000 miles of low-gear travel by air-cooled cars in various parts of the United States on July 1 alone.

TREND TOWARDS EIGHT SEEN BY HASTINGS

In the fine car field, the trend is undoubtedly toward eight-cylinder cars, in the opinion of Charles D. Hastings, president and general manager of the Hupp Motor Car corporation.

In support of his conclusion, Mr. Hastings points out that sales of eight-cylinder cars during 1925 more than doubled, and that more than five times as many straight eights were bought in 1925 as in 1924. Their sales to date for 1926 are more than twice their 1925 level.

"There is, without question, a momentous change taking place in the choice of fine cars," he says. "Buyers last year invested more than $150,000,000 in eight-cylinder cars. This year they are actually in the process of doubling that investment, of which at least half will be for the straight eight, or eight in line type of engine.

"What is happening in the purchase of fine cars goes deeper, however, than the mention of mere dollar volume. It has to do with the way the American public is thinking in terms of fine cars and fine-car performance. It goes straight back to the actual demonstration and proof—every day and all over America—of the new kind of performance and value offered in this type car.

"It is an uprooting from the public mind of the old-fashioned idea that mere price or name must necessarily mean prestige. Discriminating motor car buyers, rather, are now sensing the prestige of super-fine performances—the prestige, if you will, of the newest and best, when those are the proper development of a super-efficient principle."

Family Holds Reunion.

Annual reunion of the Wilson family will be held at Grant park Tuesday, July 20. The Rev. Mr. Culpepper, of Nellie Dodd church, will deliver the principal address.

"SOMETHING IS HAPPENING IN THE AUTOMOTIVE WORLD"

ALMOST A YEAR AGO the industry began to say: "Something is happening in the automotive world".

The public had found itself suddenly presented with a car that fulfilled beyond all expectations its conception of what a car should be and what a car should do.

It was powerful. It performed with dash and spirit. It was at home in any traffic. It was easy to drive and easy to park. It was beautiful. It offered comfort and luxury .... yet its price was low.

Immediately great interest focused upon this car. Day by day that interest grew more and more intense. It doubled and redoubled as the weeks and months rolled by. On throughfare and highway this car asked no favors, feared no road.

Then, when endurance took first place among its proved qualities, in the hands of thousands of owners—the final proof of excellence was established.

Today public preference stands at a new peak of enthusiasm for the car that won its place by right of merit.

This public preference confirms the fact that something, indeed, was happening a year ago.

With the greatest year in Oldsmobile history now a highlight in the history of the industry itself; with thousands of owners lavishing their praise upon this car; with a record of performance and stamina established ....

Now what was happening may be freely told:

GENERAL MOTORS was mustering new hearts and heads and hands to the service of Oldsmobile. A new staff of leaders was taking command.

From distinguished service, in all phases of the industry, they came, bringing with them a new appreciation of public wants and needs, a new will to serve, new pride, new vigor and new skill.

They shared a common vision, cherished a common aim, held firm to a common purpose which they were determined to achieve.

And with Oldsmobile each man recognized the opportunity to achieve that common purpose. Shoulder to shoulder with him stood others just as earnest, just as capable as he. At their absolute command were the envied facilities and veteran craftsmen of one of the pioneer manufacturers of the automobile world. Back of all this, at their disposal, lay the vast resourses of General Motors.

Seizing these facilities, they bent to their task with a will.

United in their purpose they dedicated to its achievement not only heads and hands but hearts ... their whole-souled ambition to perform a public service, to fulfill a public need.

How well they succeeded, everyone now knows.

Why they succeeded is this:

DEEP-ROOTED in the mind of every man who plans or builds or tests Oldsmobile is the unwavering determination that his knowledge and skill and resources shall render constant service ....

.. that the American family may have, at a moderate investment, a car that gratifies their finer tastes as well as satisfies their every need ....

.. that Oldsmobile shall not be wanting in a single essential factor that contributes to performance, comfort, beauty or long life ....

.. that in the design, material and manufacture of every detail, the strictest standards shall be rigidly maintained ....

.. that their boundless resources and matchless facilities shall be utilized to the utmost to provide these qualities at the lowest possible cost ....

This is more than a purpose; it is a creed.

It is accepted as a trust, with the firm determination that nothing shall ever deflect the loyalty of Oldsmobile from this ideal.

This—our steadfast pledge—is your firm assurance.

DODGE BROTHERS MOTOR CARS USED IN BIBLE LANDS

In the vast exploration program carried out recently by members of the Archeological Congress in Syria and Palestine, Dodge Brothers Motor cars and trucks were an important link in the success of the operations.

The Archeological congress consisted of about 150 members, who penetrated Syria and Palestine to make an intensive search for evidences of the human race which existed prior to the time of Christ.

The congress was well equipped before arrival at Beyrough, Syria, from which point caravans were organized for penetration into the Holy Land and nearby.

Knowledge of the purposes of the congress was sent Major Bourdillon, French high commissioner at Beyrough, who had been instructed to assist in providing transportation and other comforts for their penetration into the ancient lands made prominent in biblical history.

Commissioner Bourdillon at once got in touch with F. A. Kettaneh, of the Eastern Motor company, distributors for Dodge Brothers, Inc., at Beyrough, to arrange a fleet of Dodge Brothers motor cars and trucks.

Major Bourdillon owns a Dodge Brothers motor car for his personal use at Beyrough and for travel in his work for the French government.

Thoroughly familiar with the country over which the congress would pass, he knew that an unusually sturdy car would be required and this was his reason for calling upon Mr. Kettaneh.

"The authorities wanted the trip to be completed without a hitch, and it was," Mr. Kettaneh said later. "The journey into the interior of Syria and Palestine was made with ease, although these countries possess but little semblance of roads suitable for use of automobiles. The members of the congress were enthusiastic in their praise of the performance of the Dodge Brothers motor cars."

FRAT TO ENTERTAIN NATIONAL OFFICERS

Four national officials of the Kappa Alpha fraternity will be guests at 7:30 o'clock Thursday night at a dinner at the Druid Hills Golf club, given by members of the Kappa Alpha association, of Atlanta, according to Henry C. Heinz, president of the association.

The officers who will be in Atlanta at that time are: W. B. Crawford, grand historian, of Orlando, Fla.; Claude W. Gignoux, grand purser, of St. Louis, Mo.; Dr. Horatio Hughes, editor of the Kappa Alpha Journal, College of Charleston, Charleston, S. C., and Edward Hodges, chief alumnus, of Columbia, S. C.

Although many members of the association are out of the city on vacations, Mr. Heinz has asked those who are in Atlanta to attend. The dinner will be informal and reservations should be made not later than Wednesday with McDonald Brittain, secretary.

W. J. TILSON TAKES OATH AS JUDGE IN NEW DISTRICT

Judge William J. Tilson, prominent Atlanta attorney, was sworn in Saturday morning as judge of the recently created federal court for the central Georgia district. He was given a recess appointment by President Coolidge, after the senate committee had refused to confirm his nomination by a vote of 9 to 7, following a strong fight against him led by the Georgia senators.

The oath was administered by Judge Samuel H. Sibley, of the federal court, northern district of Georgia. It was the first time in seven years a federal judge was inducted into office in Atlanta.

Judge Tilson has stated that he will move to Macon at an early date as the central court of the district will be maintained there.

Immediately after the oath, Judge Tilson was invited by Judge Sibley to hear a calendar of criminal cases beginning July 20. This was under a special designation sent by Judge Richard W. Walker, superior judge of the fifth federal reserve district. Judge Tilson said owing to the press of personal business incident to clearing up his affairs before assuming his new duties, he may be prevented from sitting on the case.

Important Operation At Buick Plant

A Buick valve-in-head engine is being added to the chassis in the picture above. Previous to this step in assembly, the chassis started as a bare frame. Body brackets and running board brackets were riveted on, axles, torque tube, cantilever springs, etc., were fastened in place by automatic tools, as the chassis moved slowly forward along the assembly line on an endless conveyor.

The engine is fastened to the frame at three points. This type of suspension, with the single, automatically lubricated universal joint, takes up stresses and torsional twists and delivers the power directly to the rear wheels. Here the torque tube comes into play, taking the strain of driving away from the rear springs so that the engine is in effect pulling the car along.

As the car moves forward after receiving the engine, other important parts are added. The wheels are placed on the axles and the four-wheel brakes adjusted. The radiator is put into place and connected. The front fenders, mud guards and running boards are fastened to the chassis.

A. L. Belle Isle Named Head Of Hertz System in Atlanta

The dream of a young man will be realized shortly, it was announced Saturday when it became known that A. L. Belle Isle has been named president of the Hertz Driv-Ur-Self Company of Atlanta, and that plans to complete the network of stations throughout the United States are being pushed to rapid completion.

This became known when it was stated by high officials of the Atlanta branch of the Hertz organization that John Hertz, president of the Yellow Truck and Coach Manufacturing company, of Chicago, was the dreamer, and that he laid plans to organize a drive-yourself auto company based on the chain-store idea, which would allow patrons to "buy miles."

The Hertz concern, which already has begun operation of the Atlanta branch, will begin at once establishment of branches in other Georgia cities and those of North Carolina and South Carolina. Mr. Belle Isle will direct establishment of these branches from headquarters, which have been established at 40 Auburn avenue.

The Hertz company is now under the supervision of the General Motors corporation, and completion of the chain automobile renting agencies in all sections of the United States is being directed by this firm.

"The Hertz idea in driving yourself will permit customers to rent a car in Atlanta and to drive it to New York, leaving it at the New York branch and paying for his mileage there," Mr. Belle Isle said. "This sets a precedent in this line of automobile travel, and has become universally popular with tourists and other travelers. It means that there will be stations all along the way, at which the cars can be serviced by expert mechanics connected with this organization, and will offer a distinctive and exclusive traveling convenience not available from any other company.

"Work of organizing and establishing branches in other Georgia and South and North Carolina cities is well under way, and will be pushed to completion in order that the network of stations in this territory may be formed at the earliest possible date. Temporary headquarters will be maintained here, which the prospect of keeping them here.

"Our branch here will offer every attraction now offered by other drive yourself companies and in addition will place at the disposal of patrons a high type car at a relatively low cost. The machines are the last word in mechanical perfection and are built to give service and comfort. No expense has been spared in making the car a superior product, and thousands of customers in the east and middle west have expressed pleasure at the installation of the service in this section of the country."

A. L. BELLE ISLE.

Mr. Belle Isle is the real pioneer of the taxi industry of Atlanta, and 20 years ago drove the first motor-propelled taxi in this city. Since that time he had been prominently identified with the taxi and automobile business of this section of the state.

At present he is president of the Black & White Cab company, and has large interests in other fields of the automotive industry.

His selection as head of the Hertz company in this territory is regarded as a sure sign of the success of the venture, and friends hailed the move as another indication of the great importance attached by large interests to Atlanta as the natural and logical distribution point of the southeast.

The site selected for the station at Atlanta, is the first of the southeast. It is located in the downtown area in the heart of the business district.

A corps of experts has been employed to serve patrons of the new company. The Hertz company will not market the car, at least at this time, but will use it only for drive yourself purposes. Many specially patented devices add to the comfort and service the new car will give.

FOREIGN ENGINEERS VISIT CADILLAC PLANT

Mechanical and electrical engineers, metallurgists, professors and industrial leaders were among the group of twelve Austrian manufacturers who recently spent two days in Detroit as a part of their tour through the United States. The Austrians, who are traveling under the auspices of the United States Chamber of Commerce, are in this country to study American manufacturing methods.

During the first day, the party was entertained by the General Motors corporations and in the morning they were shown through the plant of the Cadillac Motor Car company. Keen interest was expressed by them in methods by which the highest quality is maintained in connection with modern, large-scale production methods. Their particular interest in precision methods in manufacturing made it impossible to complete the trip through the plant in the scheduled time.

The Austrians, by their host of questions regarding every detail of the different methods used, showed themselves to be well-informed students of manufacturing. At the Cadillac plant, the members of the groups were greeted by Lynn McNaughton, vice president, and by various other officials of the company.

After a luncheon at the General Motors building, the visitors were taken to inspect the proving grounds of the corporation near Milford. Here, after a number of thrilling rides over the speed roadways, they were shown comparative charts detailing the performance of many types of cars.

The party is under the leadership of Dr. Carl Wessely, director of the Commercial museum in Vienna, and includes Engineer Rene Anger of Josef Anger and Sohne, machinery manufacturers; Willy Nahloowski, commercial counselor, Cotton Spinning and Weaving Mills; Engineer Robert Schmitt, tannery; Adolf Hofer of Thomas Hofer and Son, art and wax head factory; Dr. Engineer Walter Doblhoff, Berndorf Metalware factory; Prof. Dr. Julius Urbanek, professor of technical university, Vienna; August Miller, Aichholz, hat manufacturer; Herwigs Kitscha, manager of Latzel and Kitcha, builders and building material dealers; August Erwin Thonet of Thonet Brothers, bentwood furniture; Karl Sinaiberger, tannery; Alfred Panovsky, electrical works and annular furnace owner, and Engineer Frank M. Fischl, manufacturer of silk goods.

Before making a study of the Cadillacs and other plants in Detroit, the party had visited New York city, Albany, Schenectady, Utica, Rochester and Buffalo. Visits were then made to Chicago, Cincinnati, Dayton, Pittsburgh and Washington. At Washington the party divided, each member to study specialized lines of manufacture according to his varied interest.

CHANDLER&CLEVELAND NOT AFFECTTD BY SALE

To avoid any possibility of confusion on the part of the Chandler and Cleveland car owners in Atlanta, announcement was made Saturday by C. S. Thompson, former president of the Marmon Atlanta company, that he will continue to represent this line of cars in this territory, and will maintain and operate a complete sales and service station in their old home, 444 Peachtree street, temporarily.

"We wish to convey to the public," said Mr. Thompson, for their information that the sale of our Marmon franchise to the company who's announcement appears in today's paper, in no way has affected our connection with the Chandler and Cleveland factory, the sale being the result of our decision to concentrate on this popular line of cars and we are now in the process of an expansion program that calls for one of the largest agencies in this section of the country."

SIMPLE BRAKE TEST OUTLINED

Many accidents result from faulty adjustment of brakes.

Try this test on your brakes if you would avoid dire trouble:

When your car is going ten miles an hour will your brakes bring it to a standstill within 9.2 feet?
Or 20.8 feet at 15 miles?
Or 37 feet at 20 miles?
Or 58 feet at 25 miles?
Or 83.3 feet at 30 miles?
Or 113 feet at 35 miles?

If not, get busy. Before going a block from the garage, make a service test by throwing out the clutch and applying the brakes. Under no circumstances should the car be taken further if the brakes fail to operate correctly.

Experience indicates that more motor accidents result from faulty adjustment or application of brakes than from any other cause. Don't wait until tomorrow to give your brakes the "once over." You may be in the hospital by then—or the police station. Cats may have nine lives, but no mortal has ever yet been killed more than once.

The brake lining which consists of asbestos, woven and interwoven with wire, chemically treated, is an item of great importance. Be satisfied with nothing less than a lining made of the finest quality, long fibre Canadian Crysotile asbestos. It costs your garage or repair man more money, but he doesn't charge you any more. It speaks well for a man who takes a less profit in order to give you a better job.

There is a great difference in asbestos. Shoddy asbestos will not give the lining proper braking qualities. The Russell Manufacturing company of Middletown, Conn., guarantees their "Rusco" brake lining as being made of Crysotile asbestos, the best the earth produces, and they stand back of this guarantee with 93 years of manufacturing integrity.

LEAVES WHEELCHAIR, DRIVES HIS OWN CAR

Eddie Turner, of Wichita, has abandoned his wheel-chair, which for years was his only means of locomotion, and now is happily and proudly driving his own car.

Not that Turner is cured of the disability that has robbed him of the use of his legs ever since an accident in his early childhood. He has, however, been saved from a lifetime in his wheelchair by the ingenuity and skill with which an automobile salesman adapted a New-Day Jewett to being controlled entirely by hand.

Turner, after his accident, applied himself to developing his musical talents, and today he is one of the best known musicians in Wichita, having succeeded well despite his handicap.

He has long wanted a car, and determined to buy one if a control could be devised so that he could operate the car without the use of his feet, but was unable to attain his ends. Finally, taking hope in the many new features of safety and ease of control incorporated in the New-Day Jewett sedan, he made his proposition to O. G. Overtuff, a salesman for the Paige distributor at Wichita.

Overtuff, who spent several years as a Paige-Jewett mechanic, credits his success in the sales field to a thorough knowledge of the superior mechanical features of this line of popular motor cars. Undismayed by this seemingly unsurmountable obstacle to a ready sale, he accepted the challenge to his ingenuity, donned overalls, went to the shop and attacked the knotty problem.

The final soluction was a neat, simple, and wholly efficient control system, consisting of a snigle hand lever, identical in appearance with the gear shift lever. This lever is welded to the brake pedal, which is connected with the cluch pedal by a rigid cross timber. Moving the lever forward disengages the clutch so that the gears may be shifted. Pushing the lever still further forward applies the powerful hydraulic four-wheel brakes.

With this arrangement, Turner operates the car with more than ordinary skill, shifting gears, starting, stopping and gliding away through traffic with smoothness and precision that many a veteran driver might envy.

EXHIBIT SPACE FOR EXHIBITION NEARLY ALL GONE

The larger part of the auditorium and annex is already under contract for the industrial exposition, August 2, according to Virgil Shepard, in charge of exhibit space. Work has already started preparing machinery which will be installed. The Atlanta Milling company will demonstrate the entire process of flour and meal manufacture.

The Tripod Paint company will show "grinders" used in the preparation of paint pigments and will mix paint and show its best application. Neckties will be cut and sewn by the All Star Manufacturing company.

The complete process of shoe manufacture will be carried on in the J. K. Orr display. A. M. Robinson company will make overalls and shirts. One of the most artistic of the exhibits is expected from the General Outdoor Advertising company, who will have painters constructing signs, some in oils and others with electrical effects.

In the exhibit of the Piedmont laundry will be shown a model dry cleaning plant. C. A. Dahl company operates a manufacturing plant in addition to its floral business and will exhibit screens and trellis in the process of construction.

Additional exhibitors secured during the past week include the Georgia Railway and Power company, the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph company, Piedmont laundry, Frank E. Block Candy company, McCord-Stewart company, Atlanta Casket company, C. A. Dahl company, and the Maddox Coffee company.

The Atlanta Chamber of Commerce is cooperating with the Georgia Manufacturers association and the Merchants and Manufacturers association in staging the show, which will be held during annual merchants' week when retail merchants from all over the southeast visit Atlanta.

EUROPEAN EXPERT SAYS LIGHT CAR IS ON ITS WAY

BY F. Z. EAGER.

"Word of the interest being taken in the United States in the European type of small, light car, reached me in Sydney just before I left for the United States a litle over a month ago. At that time I learned that the Peugeot Brothers were here and that Citroen, of France, was also looking over the American market with the idea of possible tie-up with American manufacturing companies to secure an outlet for a part of his large production.

"This was interesting in the extreme, for Australia faces many of the conditions which face the motoring public in the United States with this exception, we have by no means the fine roads which you have here. The great bulk of importation of cars into Australia is from the United States and American-built cars are in the majority in all of our cities. What developments are made here are, for that reason, of great importance to us.

"Such cars as Overland, Ford, Chevrolet, Dodge, Hudson, Willys-Knight and others make up the great proportion of our registrations. We have been closely in touch with the European trend toward smaller cars but have not been in accord with the narrow treads and restricted body room of the average English or French car of small motor dimensions.

"We have liked their speed, for when we get a chance at a good stretch of road we like to travel and road racing is very popular in our country. But we want the room of the American car in which feature your present cheaper cars present very distinct advantages over the much higher-priced small car of the European makers.

"We have often wondered why your engineers, with their well-known tendencies in advanced motor construction, have not developed the light car to incorporate in its design the high motor speed features, low fuel consumption and good road speed capacities which are possessed by the European small cars. In fact your development in the small car field has not been at all in line with what you have done in your larger cars, as we look at it.

"Fiat, of Italy, develops a motor of 95 cubic inch displacement which develops 300-h. p. at 9,000 r.p.m. Of course, this is going to the extreme, but the average small car of Europe develops 30 horsepower from a rated capacity of 12 h. p. to 15 h. p. American small cars do not meet these standards and will not until they have taken on some of the features of European small car motor design. You will require different lubrication, more efficient cooling and higher speed motors.

"The ideal small car for Australia and I should say this would be true of the ideal small car for this country, would have a wheel base in line with your present light, four-cylinder cars. It would have a standard 56-inch tread to meet your road requirements and this would permit of your standard body specifications as they relate to interior dimentions.

"If you go in for European speed standards in the light car class, you will have to adopt lower bodies in their overall dimensions but expert fitting of the body to the chassis will permit this and it is not stretching the imagination to bleieve that you may have cars as low as 5 feet 8 inches from roof to ground, which would give real stability over the road at good speeds.

"Tire sizes will also come down and I understand that there are certain tire makers in this country who are all ready to go ahead on balloon tires fully three inches less in diameter than your present small balloon sizes. These would aid materially in keeping the body height down. There have been some striking reductions in the height of American-built cars during the past two or three years but this has not as yet extended into your light car production. When it comes it will bring with it a pronounced change for the better in appearance.

"It is entirely likely that the entrance of the European type light, low car, adapted to American methods of design and construction and made for use on American roads will sound a field of sales that will be quite different from the field now occupied by your lighter cars.

"If it hits at the same class of buyers that the European light car reaches, it will be accepted by your owners of large cars as a second car to use for city driving and for service at country clubs and other runs of this nature. This does not mean that it will not reach your big field of buyers of low-priced cars. It will appeal to them for the very features of construction which will make it immediately acceptable to the buyers of higher-priced cars.

"To utilize the European principles of design will require the use of the finest materials, the most advanced engineering construction, and the finest mechanical operations for the European small motor is a highly organized and highly efficient power plant. These will mean things not common to your present car of the dimensions which will characterize the new type of low, light, fast motor car.

"In Europe, these light cars sell at prices around $1,200 to $2,000 in a hotly competitive field. Here they will have to sell below the $1,000 mark, but with American manufacturing methods it should be comparatively easy for some large, well-organized maker to produce an automobile along European lines, adapted to American service, and of the highest quality that can be associated with a motor car, for a price within the three figure limit."

CORSETIERES TO HOLD SESSION AT PIEDMONT

All this week visiting corsetieres from the southeastern states will be in session at the Piedmont hotel, where the H. & W. Gossard Co. is conducting a special salesmanship class and training school for sales girls representing the retail stores.

All of the new types of corsets and girdles are being displayed on living figures and a thorough course in fitting is being given for these wholesale representatives. Diplomas will be awarded at the end of the week. H. & W. Gossard garments are sold exclusively at M. Rich & Bros. Co.

More New Trolleys Go In Service Today Upon Marietta Line

A second group of Atlanta's new interurban cars will be put in operation today when five trolleys, modern in construction and design; will be put on the Atlanta Northern Marietta line for service, according to announcement Saturday by the Georgia Railway and Power company. The first group was put into service last Sunday on the Stone Mountain line.

The new cars, which bear names instead of numbers and which are to be put in operation today are Joseph E. Brown, Joel Hurt, Richard Peters, A. Stephens Clay and Joel Chandler Harris

In addition to the five new cars, four of the older type cars are being refitted and reconditioned for service as trailer cars on the Marietta line. They are being repainted in the same color scheme as the new interurban cars.

AUTO AIDS COLLEGE'S SEARCH FOR RARE FISH

Collection and classifications of new species of fish heretofore unknown to the scientific world is the aim of a motorized expedition now en route to northwest and Pacific coast regions, headed by Professor Carl L. Hubbs, curator of fishes of the University of Michigan zoological museum.

A specially designed Chevrolet truck, donated by the university by the General Motors comporation, is being used by Professor Hubbs for transporting equipment and members of his party, from Ann Arbor, Mich., the home of the university, to various coast and inland cities where investigations will be made. Free service will be rendered by Chevrolet service stations during the trip, which will take five months from June 1 to October 1.

Automobile tourists frequenting Michigan and other central states will especially benefit by the program of Professor Hubbs, which calls for the introduction of fresh water game fish from Washington and Oregon streams. Motorists find fishing one of their chief diversions, and in order to keep pace with their demands, new species must be introduced. State fish commissions through the county will follow Professor Hubbs' experiments in restocking of streams, as inducements for the motor tourists to visit their localities.

Other regions where specimens will be collected are Wisconsin, Lake Superior, Minnesota, North Dakota and California streams.

Specimens of fish collected will be preserved in the compact truck laboratory for future study by students in zoological courses.

Professor Hubbs is a well-known figure in the scientific world for his original work in investgating fish life. He studied fish propagation in the Au Sable, Mich., river drainage area and Cheboygan county lakes for the Michigan department of conservation and in several of the Pacific coast and northwestern states.

Two hundred different kinds of fishes are now known to science as dwellers in the shore waters of Washington and Oregon, according to Professor Hobbs, and many others there have never been classified. Use of the Chevrolet truck will allow a wide territory to be covered at a minimum expense, Professor Hubbs says.

Women Show Driving Skill in Denver Traffic Tests

Sixty-nine Denver women qualified for the finals in this driving test for women only, which was conducted by the Denver police department and the James-Nash Motors company. The photograph shows the finalists competing for the $100, $50 and $25 prizes on the difficult courses laid out between the rows of tenpins. Over 200 entered the qualification run, which had to be made through heavy traffic and under the supervision of a member of the Denver police department. Nash cars were furnished by the James-Nash Motors company and twenty accessory houses contributed special prizes. A perfect score of 100 per cent was made by a girl of 17.

Atlanta Elks Leave Today for Chicago For National Meeting

The delegation from Atlanta lodge No. 78, B. P. O. Elks, which will attend the national convention at Chicago July 12, will leave Atlanta this morning at 9 o'clock on the Dixie Flier.

The Atlanta group will be headed by J. Turner Fitten, exalted ruler and representative to the grand lodge of Atlanta lodge, and B. C. Broyles, district deputy, who will represent the northern district of Georgia, and a large number of other well-known Elks, both from Atlanta and the state at large, will travel in the special car of the Georgia party to Chicago.

Mr. Broyles, who also is secretary and treasurer of the Georgia Elks' association, will represent this body at the banquet to be given the officers of all state associations, which will be held Tuesday, July 13, at 6:30 o'clock in the English room of the Congress hotel, Chicago.

The most important feature of the convention is the dedication of the Elks' national memorial in Chicago, which has just been completed at a cost of $3,000,000 as a tribute to the 1,051 members of the order who made the supreme sacrifice during the great world war.

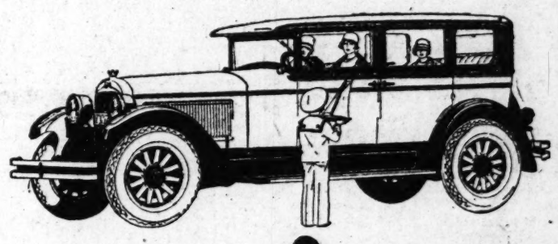

The grand lodge officers will be elected at this meeting and it now seems certain that Honorable Charles H. Grakelow, exalted ruler of Philadelphia lodge No. 2, who is well and favorably known to all Atlanta and southern Elks, will be elevated to the position of grand exalted ruler, and it is practically certain that the present efficient grand secretary, Fred C. Robinson, will be continued in his position.

The place of meeting for 1927 is to be hotly contested, Cincinnati and Miami being the principla cities desiring the convention, and both of these points will make great efforts to secure this gathering.

A delegation of Florida Elks will pass through Atlanta Sunday morning in a special train and will stop over in Atlanta long enough to be the guests of Atlanta lodge for breakfast.

Today's trend in motor car buying

It is a widely accepted belief in the automobile industry that inside of two years the man who wants THE FINEST PERFORMANCE will buy eight cylinders as a matter of course.

That is half the picture of the new trend in motor car buying. The other half is this:

The day is definitely past when the buyer of REALLY FINE EIGHT-CYLINDER PERFORMANCE, embellished with a beautiful body, must pay the penalty of a high premium.

Hupmobile has shown a new way to build an eight-cylinder car that literally ranks above anything else in America—that American engineers compare with only one other car, and that a handbuilt European classic which costs several times the Hupmobile Eight price.

This is the carefully considered opinion of some of the shrewdest leaders in the industry.

The overwhelming success of the Hupmobile Eight—in sales as well as in mechanism and performance—has helped to bring about this new order of thinking.

The plain fact is that Hupmobile has got out of the eight-cylinder principle more than that principle had ever before been made to yield.

It is by no mere chance—indeed, it is highly significant—that Hupmobile builds into this Eight an airplane type of mechanism which costs far more than the ordinary, and retains its quiet and efficiency.

That one fact is significant of this eight's new kind of performance and stamina; of its utterly remarkable ability to respond perfectly month after month to every call upon it.

It is by no mere chance, either, that the Hupmobile Eight is more economical of gasoline than most sixes of comparable size.

Gasoline economy, oil economy—but above all, economy of maintenance—were designed into the car by those who have for upward of twenty years studied the principles of eight-cylinder construction.

Its low cost of operation and maintenance is of equal effectiveness with this car's performance and its amazingly low price, in establishing the rapidly growing preference for this new kind of eight-cylinder car.

Drive any Hupmobile Eight in city traffic and on the highway. You will then agree—with enthusiasm—that no American car equals this Hupmobile performance.

You, yourself, might consider other cars for comparison with the Hupmobile Eight. We strongly advise this:

By all means investigate them thoroughly and know to a certainty just what you are giving up if you purchase one of such cars in place of the Hupmobile Eight.

A comparison of performance—of upkeep cost—of driving facility—will make these other types which cling to the engineering of a passing day seem as out of date as mid-Victorian architecture.

New York, July 10.—(AP)—Recent sharp advances were followed by moderate reactions in the cotton market here today as far as the new crop months were concerned, while there was a very sharp closing break in the price of July contracts. October sold off to 16.98, rallied to 17.17 and closed at 17.08, with the central market closing steady at a net decline of 123 points on July and of 10 to 21 points on later deliveries.

Trading in current July contracts ended at noon, and that position was relatively easy during the entire morning under liquidation. The earlier selling was absorbed by covering on declines of about 30 to 35 points, but later in the morning there was another flurry of offerings and the price broke to 17.50 or 132 points below Friday's closing quotation. There were sales later at recoveries of 9 to 10 points from the lowest and it was estimated that between 50,000 and 75,000 sales were involved in the evening-up of the July position.

Up to the end of this week about 20,000 bales had been tendered on July contracts and it was expected that the remaining interest would be liquidated by deliveries of about 5,000 bales before the end of the month. No fresh development in the spot situation was mentioned in connection with the break, and the closing fluctuations in July were generally attributed to the final readjustment of the technical position.

The general market opened steady at a decline of 12 to 19 points under week-end realizing and new crop months showed net losses of 22 to 24 points during the early trading with December selling off to 16.96. The reiterated reports of insect damage compared with prospects for further showers more or less generally over the south and rather better reports from the goods markets brought in some buying on the declines, however, and December rallied to 17.14 during the middle of the morning, closing at 17.07. Private cables attributed the decline in Liverpool to week-end liquidation and hedge selling.

The amount of cotton on shipboard awaiting clearance at the end of the week was estimated at 60,000 against 44,000 last year.

MARKET ACTIVE AT NEW ORLEANS.

New Orleans, July 10.—(AP)—The cotton market was quite active for a short Saturday session, and although the price trend was reactionary, it was due more to week-end realizing by recent buyers than to any reversal of recent bullish sentiment. The market opened easier and lost 16 to 20 points in the early trading, largely because Liverpool made such a poor response to the advance in American markets on Friday. After this selling was absorbed the market firmed up on continued showery weather in the belt and the prospect of showers over Sunday, the rally being helped by further news of crop damage due to insects.

The advance from the early lows amounted to 15 to 23 points, October again crossing the 17-cent line to 17.03. The bulge brought out considerable week-end realizing, which was helped by weakness in the July position, which went out in New York today at a decline of 123 points. The close was steady, showing net losses of 29 points on July and of 10 to 18 points on new crop months.

At the start as Liverpool was much lower than due first trades showed losses of 10 points and prices eased off further in the first hour of trading until October traded at 16.80, December at 16.73 and January at 16.70 or 16 to 20 points under the close of yesterday. These prices proved to be the lows of the day.

The market rallied in the second hour on showery weather shown by the map and on an official forecast for further showery weather over Sunday. October traded up to 17.05, December to 16.92 and January to 16.85 or 15 to 23 points up from the lows. The bulge brought out the usual week-end realizing and prices eased off 9 to 16 points from the highs in the last hour.

SPOTS IN NEW ORLEANS.

New Orleans, July 10.—(AP)—Spot cotton closed quiet 28 points down. Sales 284. Low middling 14.75; middling 18.00; good middling 18.65. Receipts 1,328; stock 170,163.

The Day in Finance

BY R. L. BARNUM

Sensational Rise of General Motors This Year Is Discussed by Barnum.

New York, July 10.—General Motors started out this week by making a new high record price for all time with one of the oldest and most conservative houses in Wall street recommending in a detailed letter the purchase of the stock by investors, the same house that advised the purchase of Steel common recently before Steel common began to soar to new high record prices for all time.

This Wall street house has had headquarters at 71 Broadway ever since the Steel corporation first established its headquarters in that building. A year or so ago the Steel corporation purchased the 71 Broadway building. The house in question for the past 25 years has been generally known throughout Wall street as the brokers of the Steel corporation. In purchasing each year stock to be sold to employees the Steel corporation has large stock market operations.

In brief, the stock exchange house which got out a detailed letter early this week on General Motors has long been recognized by Wall street as an authority on the Steel corporation and the steel industry in general. This house from now on will probably be recognized as an authority on General Motors and the automobile industry.

As recently as 1918 General Motors net sales amounted to $269,796,000. At that time total assets were $315,066,000. Wall street was then predicting that General Motors would be to the automobile industry what the Steel corporation then was to the steel trade. These predictions have been realized much sooner than was generally expected. For the 12 months ended December 31, 1925, General Motors net sales mounted up to $734,592,000 against $269,796,000 for 1918 with its total assets $716,722,000 against $315,066,000.

General Motors Progress.

The letter at hand this week at hand a very interesting table is given showing the progress made by General Motors during the past four years with the results for the first quarter of 1926. Net sales for the first quarter of this year are given as $235,858,000 against an average per annum for the past four full years of $635,341,000 starting out at $463,706,000 for 1922. For the first quarter of 1926 the increase in sales over the corresponding period of 1925 is given at 63 per cent.

For the first quarter of 1926, it is pointed out earnings were equal to $7.50 a share for the common stock against a four-year annual average of $13.88. The rate earned on the present market value of the common stock is placed at 21.4 per cent against a four-year average of 9.9 per cent.

It is further pointed out that in volume the automobile industry is now the leading industry of the country and it has in the opinion of many contributed largely to the general prosperous condition in which we now find ourselves. Next, it is pointed out that in annual sales values General Motors now leads all others. It is then added:

"On March 31, 1926, General Motors investment in real estate, plants and equipment was carried in the accounts at a valuation of $196,000,000, after applying the depreciation reserve of $94,328,000, which has been provided from earnings. This amount not only covers the investment cost of the motor car manufacturing divisions, but also embraces a large investment in plants producing electric refrigerators, farm lighting and power plants, ignition systems and all other parts and accessories required in the construction and equipment of an automobile, and in addition considerable investment in exports and overseas distributing branches and employees housing developments.

No Indebtedness Incurred.

"In the 4 1-4-year period—January 1, 1922 to March 31, 1926—$41,776,000 was expended for property, additions and betterments, and $30,434,000 for investments in affiliated companies, a total of $72,112,437. Of the cash so consumed $45,595,000 was supplied from earnings reserves for depreciation and contingencies, $13,558,000 from sale of preferred stocks and premiums paid by stockholders in exchanging 6 per cent preferred issues for the new 7 per cent, and the remainder of $12,958,000 was furnished out of the undistributed earnings for that period which amounted to $131,175,910. No indebtedness was incurred. The corporation proper has no funded debt or bank loans outstanding."

It is pointed out that on March 31, 1926, General Motors had current assets of $304,787,000, with current liabilities of $98,524,000, a ratio of 3.09 to 1; that cash, government and other marketable securities totaled $130,899,000 in addition to sight drafts with bills of lading attached, to the value of $21,333,000; that during the past 4 1-4 years, $119,000,000 has been added to the corporation's working capital out of earnings; that cash alone increased $66,500,000 and marketable securities and sight drafts $51,000,000. Purchase money mortgages outstanding January 1, 1922 in the amount of $54,450,000 have been liquidated. Sales volume during this period increased over 100 per cent, yet inventories show the small gain of 7.4 per cent and accounts and notes receivable 24 per cent. During the 4 1-4 years $34,533,673 has accured to General Motors as its equity in undistributed earnings of affiliated companies.

In the conclusion reached in the letter at hand it is stated: "In analyzing the General Motors corporation, we find all of the conditions which are considered essential to render a stock a desirable investment. Its financial position is unquestionably sound; its products are in excellent repute and in strong demand; its output is so diversified as to minimize any detrimental effects of competition, and its income return on capital employed exceeds the rate of return of most of the country's leading manufacturing corporations."

That is a good deal for any investment house to say and is highly interesting in view of the fact that the house in question is new at the business of recommending investments to the public, the letter recently sent out on Steel common being the first of its kind. Naturally much interest has been displayed throughout Wall street this week in this analysis of General Motors, especially in view of the recent price movement in Steel common following the analysis by this house of the market position of that stock.

Bull Market in Cotton?

Have prices discounted the Government estimate of a big crop, and will damage by insects and bad weather cut the crop to 14 million bales or lower? My Annual Cotton Forecast will answer these questions for you in a scientific manner and give you the date when cotton will reach low prices, where you can buy for a 300 to 500-point advance. My Tri-Weekly Letters and Annual Forecasts have been accurate on every important top and bottom for many years past, and you can depend on them in future. The big opportunities for making money come when prices are at extreme high or low levels. Don't delay! Send $40.00 for my 1926 Cotton Forecast for balance of this year and get started right. Tri-Weekly Commodity Letter $15.00 per month, or Daily Telegraph Service and Tri-Weekly Letter $50.00 per month.

HORTICULTURAL BODY TO MEET AT CORNELIA

Cornelia, Ga., July 10.—(AP)—The Georgia Horticultural society will hold its annual three days' session here beginning August 24. Prominent horticulturists from over the state are expected to be in attendance.

Oliver S. Sapp, who has been in charge of the United States fruit insect laboratory at Fort Valley for the past six years, will be on the program, J. B. Wright, of Cairo, president of the society, has announced.

The first day's program will emphasize the ornamental phase of horticulture, and will be featured by a flower show in the afternoon. The second and third days will be devoted to truck, garden and fruit problems. A motor trip through the lake and mountain country north of Cornelia for the benefit of the visitors has been planned.

SUPREME COURT EXPECTED TO RULE ON ASSESSMENTS

Washington, July 10.—(AP)—An appeal docketed today by D. Edmonds and other taxpayers of Haskell, Okla., will bring from the supreme court a ruling upon the constitutionality of the state's law of 1919 under which Haskell assessed property owners for the improvement of Main street and several other streets and avenues. The lower courts sustained the assessment.

Stock Letters.

New York, July 10.—Stocks swayed back and forth in a typical midweek session. Profit-taking and short selling in certain of the leaders which had characterized the market at the close yesterday was resumed at the opening but did not affect prices to any great extent. It was notable that activity diminished on the recession and that quotations came back easily immediately after pressure had been relaxed. Railroad issues were a feature with Southern Pacific in good demand, the buying of that issue being based on a belief of an extra increase in the dividend.

H. & B. BEER.

New York, July 10.—Following the double holiday, the stock market demonstrated that the leadership which had dominated the previous six weeks is prepared to carry on through the summer. A good many traders who got out before the fourth felt they were whipsawed yesterday when prices receded but today's short session showed a wider vitality in good stocks on any time during the rise. The next two or three weeks will see directors of half a dozen of the leading Standard Oil companies meeting for dividend action and the result seems likely to help this part of the list. We continue to feel that the rails offer the soundest field for speculative investments. We expect to see the coppers reflect the earnings of low producers such as Kennecott.

Cotton Letters.

JNO. F. CLARK & CO.

New York, July 10.—Liverpool failed to enthuse over our sharp advance yesterday on flea damage and came lower than due. New York opened down with the selling general but the decline was checked by unexpected rains that developed after midnight over the western belt and further large business in Worth street. The forecast was for thundershowers in portions of all cotton states except Oklahoma. The trade is pretty much at sea as to just how much damage has been done by the hopper and awaits information. Meanwhile should showery conditions continue, the market is likely to work higher.

H. & B. BEER.

New Orleans, July 10.—World-wide uneasiness has developed in the cotton trade in consequence of the widespread damage reported to have been done to the growing crop from Georgia westward, and because of the continuance of unsettled showery weather in the cotton region. There is the fear that other insects, especially the boll weevil, may become numerous and active. Cables were much lower than due today, probably owing to week-end covering and hedging, and while American markets opened lower in response to a disappointing Liverpool, the market is sustained by predictions of for thundershowers in nearly all sections of the belt tonight or tomorrow. Fair weather, however, was predicted for Oklahoma. Meetings of farmers and business interests are being called in different sections of Texas and Arkansas to combat the damage reported being done by the cotton flea and other insects, and there is much uneasiness throughout the Mississippi valley, Alabama and Georgia.

HUBBARD BROS. & CO.

New York, July 10.—Liquidation was encouraged by a sharp decline in Liverpool prices on the close yesterday and was enough to discount the present crop factors. Selling came principally from long interests who had bought on the advance. Considerable covering was sold on stop loss orders around 17 cents. After the first decline the market firmed up considerably on the weather map showing further rains in the valley, also private reports of rain in scattered localities in Texas. Continued complaints rush us of the poor fruiting of the plant. Many cotton farms writing us that at this time the plant does not look like one that will yield heavily. A decided improvement took place in dry goods. Reports from the New York dry goods center show 200,000 pieces of goods sold yesterday, the largest days the dry goods merchants have had since last fall. It shows the potential buying power that is lying in wait should the crop continue to go backwards.

Grain Letters.

H. & B. BEER.

Chicago, July 10.—Disappointing cables and evening-up for the impending government report brought scattered liquidation, which resulted in lower prices. The northwest was comparatively firm and this tended to retard pressure here. Trade was mixed. Cash trading basis unchanged. Reports of crop conditions in the northwest continued pessimistic, one local expert estimating North Dakota yield per acre at only 8½ bushels. Weather reports showed nothing important in Canadian northwest and forecast for that district was for fair and warmer weather. Charters were made here for 200,000 bushels to Buffalo. Southwest reported less urgency to the cash demand while seaboard reported only a scattered business. It was figured, however, that charters so far made provide for shipments of between 15,000,000 to 20,000,000 bushels during July.

New York, July 10.—(AP)—Typical midsummer dullness marked today's short period of bond trading in which prices held relatively steady. Buying interest was confined to a few semi-speculative issues but these were able to make little headway. Although offerings for the week were unusually light, the bulk of the investment demand continued to be supplied from dealers' shelves which were still well stocked from the record June flotations.

Few changes of importance took place in the foreign group. Pending further developments in the French financial situation, this country's bonds merely marked time. Belgian issues attracted better support but some of the German obligations and the Mexican assented bonds were forced back by realizing sales.

Price movements of railroad liens were conflicting, with the price average of these issues virtually unchanged. Chesapeake & Ohio and Erie mortgages continued to gain but Denver & Rio Grande 4 1-2s, Peoria & Eastern income 4s and Iowa Central 4s receded a point or more. Texas & Pacific first 5s advanced 1 1-2 points to a new high at 107 1-2 on a single transaction.

Anticipating the announcement of further reorganization details, American Writing Paper issues recovered slightly but Skelly Oil 6 1-2s remained under pressure.

Banks Prepare To Work Nights To 'Clear' Money

New York, July 10.—(AP)—The New York bank clearings, that barometer with which the financial world measures the rise and fall of business activity, running daily around the billion dollar mark, the big local banks are getting ready to work nights.

No longer will the vast canyons of Wall street be steeped in quiet and darkness after the busy day is done. Bright lights will twinkle at night in the 31 member banks of the New York Clearing house, while an army of clerks make ready thousands of checks for clearance at 2 o'clock each morning.

So large has become the ebb and flow of the money current that it has been decreed that two bank clearings are necessary to expedite the business. Beginning August 2, all checks received during the course of the day's business up to 3 o'clock must be cleared by 2 o'clock, and that all checks coming in by messenger or mail in the night and morning must be in the clearing house for a 10 o'clock clearance.

Wall street is looking for even greater volumes of money to flow into the metropolis for the conduct of industry or for deposit for the account of out-of-town banks. Bank clearings for five days this week totaled $5,230,000,000, a gain of about 10 per cent over the same period last year.

Night staffs will have to be organized to handle the clearings, which must be at the clearing house promptly at 2 o'clock in the morning. The night staffs will be recruited from the large number of clerks that are now required to arrange for the clearings before 10 o'clock in the morning.

Bankers are looking to increased business here by reason of the amendment to the clearing house constitution making it optional with banks to charge for exchange and collection on checks of out-of-town banks. This is expected to draw business from banks of other cities.

COLUMBUS CHAMBER SEEKS NEW MEMBERS

Columbus, Ga., July 10.—(AP)—Dr. Harry R. McKeen, W. H. Moulton and Malcolm D. Ainsworth, of the state-wide development organization, Greater Georgia, Inc., will come to Columbus next week to handle a membership and financial campaign for the Columbus chamber of commerce. The drive, including preliminary preparations, is expected to consume about a week.

It will be the largest Greater Georgia has handled since its organization about three months ago.

ANNOUNCING

A Revolutionary Car Rental Service

HERTZ DRIV-UR-SELF STATIONS

With the combined resources of Yellow Truck & Coach Manufacturing Company and General Motors Corporation to assure nation-wide success

TWO great corporations—nationally known for their years of experience and great resources devoted to the transportation needs of the country—have applied the well-known chain-store principle to the Driv-ur-self business.

Yellow Truck & Coach and General Motors

To millions, these names mean a soundness of management—completeness of organization. And millions will take advantage of this great service now made possible through their combined resources. It is the first time that transportation has ever been offered the public on the chain-store plan.

Many large corporations conduct regular city-wide sales and advertising campaigns in our cars—covering the entire city in half the time required when street cars are used. The small cost has amazed them. We will gladly send a special representative to discuss costs with any business concern.

This new system will revolutionize the movement of people in every city and town in the country. Wherever you go, you will be able to rent a fine-quality car easily, quickly and with no embarrassment whatever.

Rates Will Be Lowered as Volume Increases

Our rates at present are as low as any in the car-rental business—in most cases, the lowest.

With thousands of cars operating, volume will lower even the present existing low rates. The goal of this enterprise is to provide high-grade, personal transportation at a rate per mile hitherto considered impossible. To bring to millions the countless pleasures and advantages of motor-car ownership—without a single one of the disadvantages.

Many companies have aspired to this goal. The majority have failed through lack of proper equipment—financial handicaps and disregard of the fundamentals of modern business. Now—operated by these two great companies—the car-rental business will become a vital part of the social and business life of every community.

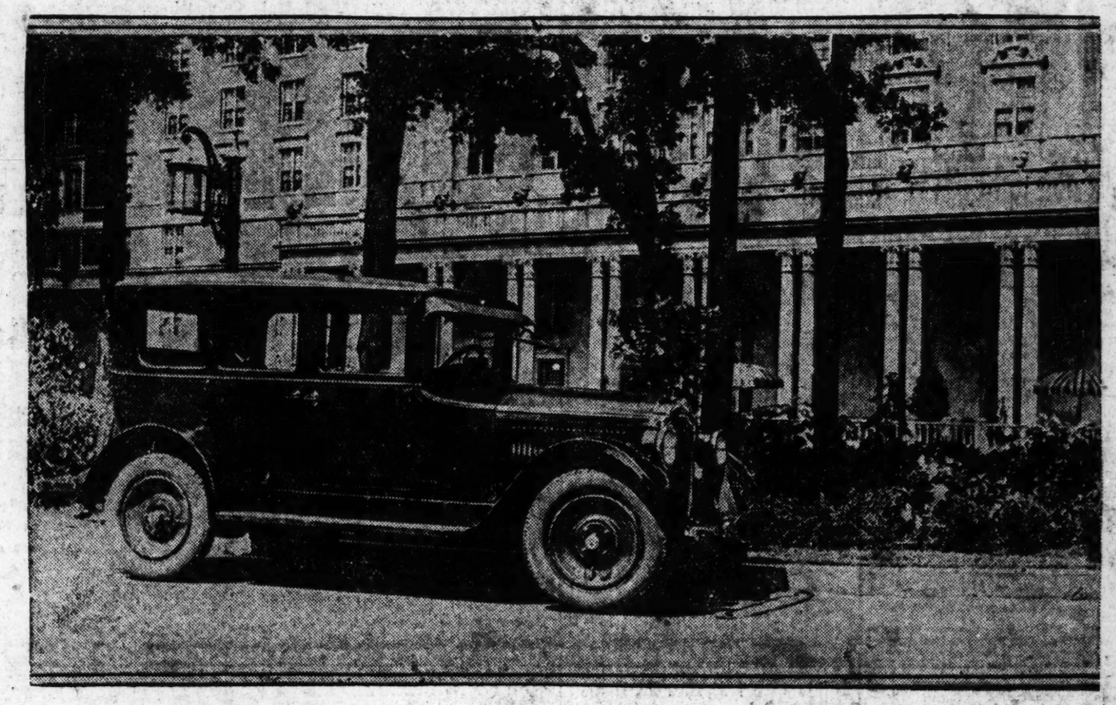

Rates as Low as 15c a Mile

You can take your family for a day's outing to near-by lakes, mountains and other recreational places in one of our cars for as little as 15c a mile.

Plan your trip and talk it over with one of our station managers. He will help you arrange a limited expense outing to any of Atlanta's recreation spots.

Cars Delivered on Request

If you are unable to come in for a car, phone us and we will send one out to your door.

Today—plan a Driv-ur-self trip over the week-end. You can go wherever you choose in our cars—to near-by lakes, beaches, boulevard trips or to the country. And the low cost of a Driv-ur-self vacation will surprise you. Come in and ask about it.

Easy to Rent a Car
No Red Tape
No Embarrassment

Any man or woman who can drive can rent one of our cars in five minutes. We have no long list of embarrassing questions — it is against the Hertz policy to pry into your private affairs. Simply prove to us that you are who you say you are. In a majority of cases identification is accomplished in a few seconds' talk between the renter and ourselves.

You don't have to have a big job or a big bank account to enjoy the pleasure and conveniences made possible by this unique motor-car service. More than 214,000 people availed themselves of the service in Chicago last year, and the big majority were men and women in moderate circumstances, earning from $25.00 to $50.00 a week—reputable people of fine standing in their communities—and thrifty enough to buy automobile transportation on a thrift basis.

Real estate prospects want first-hand information about the property they buy. The live real estate salesman today SHOWS the buyer with the aid of one of our cars. And the cost is small for this important service.

Pay Only for the Miles You Drive

The exceedingly low rate you pay simply represents the retail price for the miles you drive. This price includes gas, oil, insurance.

You can rent one of our cars—drive it wherever you wish and return it when convenient. Do not hesitate to use Hertz service even though your trip is a short one. You are welcome whether you go five miles or five hundred—stay out an hour, a day or a week. You pay only for the actual service you get.

We ask no time or mileage guarantee and place no limitation whatever on our service. Simply return the car when you are through with it—our stations are open day and night.

Station No. 1—40 Auburn Ave., Now Open

Station No. 2—4 Luckie St., Will Open Within Few Days

Additional Stations Now Being Planned

We will maintain stations at convenient locations so that you need lose no time in securing the car you want—when you want it. Equipment is now available at our first station—40 Auburn Ave.

The famous golf courses and parks are but a few miles away—yet people come hundreds of miles to see them. Let us tell you how little it will cost to spend a day at these famous recreation spots in one of our cars.

Each car kept in spotless condition—mechanically perfect at all times. New stations and more cars will be added constantly to keep this the most complete car-rental service in the country.

Come in and Register for Our Service

We've made registration a matter of a few minutes. Come into the Hertz Driv-ur-self Station nearest you and secure one of our identification cards. It will enable you to rent a car from any of our stations without a minute's delay. You'll want a car in a hurry some day. Register today.

THE CONSTITUTION'S REAL ESTATE REVIEW

CONDUCTED IN THE INTEREST OF DEVELOPMENT OF ATLANTA AND THE SOUTH

PEACHTREE DEAL SETS NEW RECORD

Sale of a parcel of property on Peachtree street at a record price was announced Saturday by A. S. Adams-Cates company. Located on the west side of Peachtree street, 50 feet north of the northwest corner of Peachtree and North avenue, with a 50-foot front on Peachtree, and a depth of 100 feet, the property was sold for a total consideration of $125,000.

This makes a rate of $2,500 per front foot, which establishes a record price for inside lots in the Peachtree-North avenue district. Byron Souders, local capitalist, who purchased the tract of land from Mrs. Natalie F. Jennings and Mrs. Josephine B. McFadden, was already in possession of the first 50-foot frontage on the Peachtree and North avenue corner, which is increased by his recent purchase to a 100x100-foot corner lot. A small building stands on the property, and while it is anticipated that an important development will take place in this section in the near future, no definite information has been given out by Mr. Souders.

TAYLOR ACCEPTS SELLING AGENCY FOR SYLVAN HILLS

O. L. Taylor, prominent Atlanta real estate man, recently announced his resignation as secretary of W. R. Sheppard and company in order to devote his entire time to handling the Sylvan Hills subdivision, having accepted the exclusive selling rights of that property. Mr. Taylor will still cooperate with Mr. Sheppard with whom he has been associated for more than a generation. He has rented a suite of rooms in Mr. Sheppard's offices at 61 1-2 North Forsyth street.

Mr. Taylor's familiarity with the Sylvan Hills property can be appreciated when it is understood that he was sales director of this subdivision with the Smith and Rankin Realty company when that firm was agent for Sylvan Hills. Up to the time Mr. Taylor left Smith and Rankin, $600,000 in homes had been sold on the Sylvan estates, he said. The Sylvan Hills property was put into Mr. Taylor's hands by its owner because of the former's past connection with it. Mr. Taylor also is interested in construction work.

The city some time ago purchased 16 lots in Sylvan Hills for the purpose of building a graded school, which is expected to be completed for the fall term. Another community feature that has been developed in this section is the Sylvan Hills Improvement club, which was organized to promote civic interest, having been given a plot of ground on which a clubhouse was constructed.

BIG GAIN NOTED IN DRUID HILLS PROPERTY SALES

In keeping with the general trend of prosperity in Atlanta real estate, C. F. Wilkinson, general manager of Druid Hills Real Estate company, expressed satisfaction with conditions for the summer season, stating that sales in this north side property for the first six months of the year, and particularly for June, far surpassed those of the corresponding months of last year.

Mr. Wilkinson announced Saturday that he had forty or fifty lots on Ponce de Leon avenue, in Druid Hills, which he intends to put on the market within the next week. While the Druid Hills Realty company is doing a general business in all Druid Hills property, it has not found it necessary to improve any original lots, because of the fact that purchasers are quick to build homes on their property, Mr. Wilkinson stated.

While real estate dealers throughout the city are enthusiastic over this year's developments and all financial reports give indication of general prosperity in this section, Mr. Wilkinson believes that the specific reason for increased sales in the Druid Hills division is to be found in the exceptional values of purchases in property, which is one of Atlanta's oldest subdivisions.

"Building restrictions, which vary in amount with the size of the lots, has been the secret of the success of Druid Hills," Mr. Wilkinson said.

THOMASVILLE BODY PLANS PUBLICITY

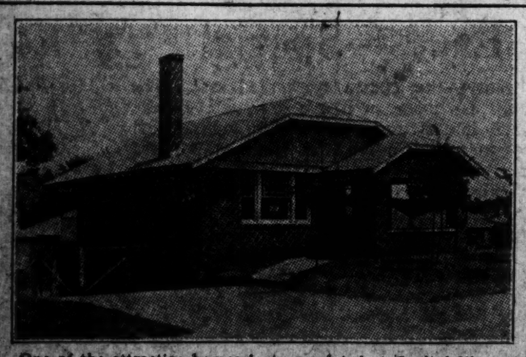

Thomasville, Ga., July 10.—(Special.)—The advertising committee of the Chamber of Commerce is at work on a program of publicity for Thomasville and Thomas county, covering agricultural possibilities, industrial and commercial resources and the winter resort features of this city and section.

Plans will be defined also for a campaign to interest other sections in these possibilities.

THOMASVILLE BUILDS DEPARTMENT STORE

Thomasville, Ga., July 10.—(Special.)—Hardly had the Bank of Thomasville moved to its handsome new home across the street, when work was begun tearing down the old bank house. On the site of it and the two adjoining stores on either side will arise a big department store which will be a handsome addition to the business section of Thomasville.

Capitol View Sales Heavy

O. W. Settle, sales manager for W. D. Beatie, prominent Atlanta realtor, builder and developer of Capitol View, expressed satisfaction with recent sales in that subdivision, including many homes to be constructed, as well as homes already built.

Plans are under way, Mr. Settle said, for erection of a number of Spanish stucco bungalows in Capitol View. These homes will be of concrete covered with stucco and should present an attractive appearance. Developments in the Capitol View section have been going on rapidly for some time.

Fire Protection And Insulation Can Be Combined

Fire loss in the United States in wood and frame houses and their contents is estimated at $50,880,787 annually by the National Board of Fire Underwriters, while the loss in masonry dwellings is placed at only $4,814,639.

The necessity for fire protection and the desirability of heat insulation often result in a dilemma. The home builder wants both and his budget may require stretching to provide one. However both qualities can be bought in the same material.

Laboratory tests show that many heat insulators have high fire resistive value. Several of them, each one inch thick, were placed four inches away from a blow torch and the time required for a flame to pierce the material was recorded. Cattle hair, quilted between paper, was scorched on the side away from the blow torch in three minutes and was burned through in 3 1-4 minutes. Shredded wood fiber, covered with heavy kraft paper, was scorched on the side away from the flame in 5 1-6 minutes and was burned through in 8 minutes.

A quilt made of sea grass and paper was pierced by the flame in 8 1-6 minutes and was scorched on the cold side in 6 minutes. It required 6 1-2 minutes to scorch the cold side of flax fiber stitched between two sheets of paper and 9 minutes for the flame to burn through.

Cane waste, compressed into a semi-rigid board, was scorched on the cold side in 7 minutes and was burned through in 8 1-6 minutes. A rigid board of cork was scorched on the cold side in 15 1-0 minutes and was burned in 18 1-4 minutes. Four gypsum insulators—two of which were boards and the other two fillers—were not burned through at the end of 1 hour and 15 minutes and the first to scorch on the cold side was not scorched until 36 minutes had elapsed.

"But how about the flues between the studs in the walls?" the home builde rasks. "Won't fire go roaring up them the same as warm air?" Of course it will, and if these flues are lined with wood lath and wood sheating just that much easily ignited material will be presented to the flames. The shrewd builder will avoid this condition. He will see, for example, that an incombustible, insulating dry filler is placed between the studs. Or fireproof, insulating sheathing can be used in place of wood sheathing and building paper. Mineral lath can be used in place of wood lath. These are but suggestions. There are other ways of combining fire protection and insulation.

But the principle remains the same. Insulate your home by all means. But in doing so choose an insulator that provides fire protection, and, if possible, one that adds structural strength to the building and that is not an extra item in the building cost. Insulation chosen on this basis will be cheap. It will cut the cost of heating in winter and will give comfort insurance in hot weather.

Atlantans Awarded Contract for School At Newberry, S. C.

A. Ten Eyck Brown and A. Barili, Jr., well-known school architects, of Atlanta, have been awarded the contract for a $250,000 high-school building at Newberry, S. C., plans for which are to be started immediately, it was announced Saturday.

The building is to be modern in every particular, and is to contain 19 standard classrooms and the following special rooms: Chemical laboratory, general science and biology laboratory, physics laboratory, home economics room, sewing room, typewriting room, manual training room, two study halls, a library, general office, principal's room, auditorium and gymnasium.

CONVICTS OF HANCOCK ARE GIVEN BARBECUE

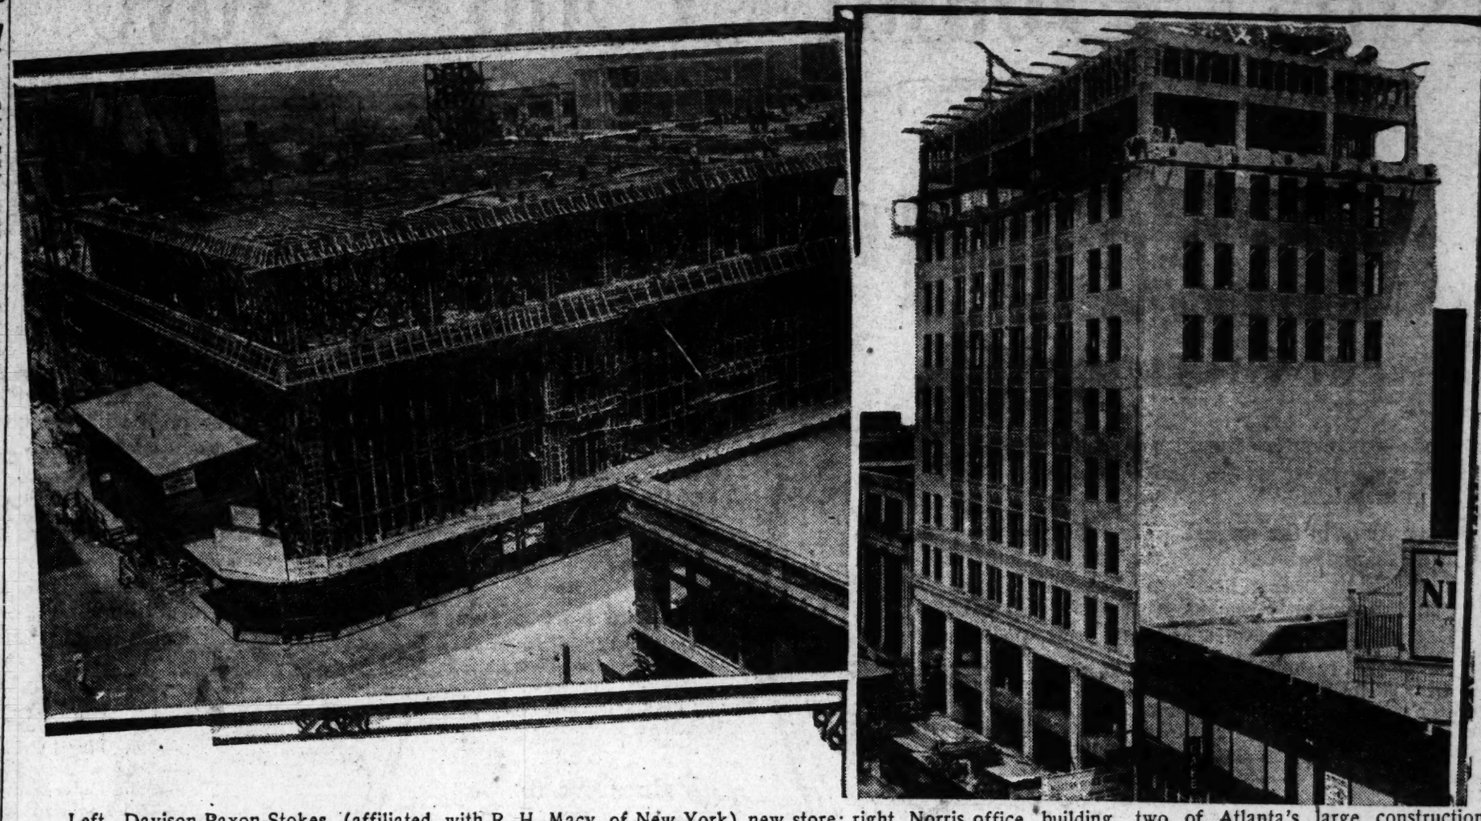

Sparta, Ga., July 10.—(Special.)—The convicts in the Hancock county gang were given a sumptuous barbecue by Warden Cheely and the county commissioners yesterday at the stockade near the city limits. It has been the custom for a number of years to give this annual feast and this year the dinner was probably the best that has ever been served to the convicts. The meat served at the barbecue was raised at the camp and was prepared by an expert in the art of cooking this southern favorite.

The county now owns a ten-ton splendid work this year and the dinner was really a compliment to all hands for this service rendered. Since the adoption of motor equipment, many more miles of highway is being worked monthly and the job is being done much more thoroughly than by the old-style mule-drawn scrapers.

The county now owns a ten-ton caterpillar tractor and several 5-ton tractors which pull heavy graders and ditchers, completing a highway as they go. Many miles of red clay road has been soiled this year with gravel and the highways widened, making hard-surfaced roads in many sections of the county.

The county commissioners hope to have practically all of the red clay roads, in sections where they are rough in winter, soiled before the fall rains begin.

Big Construction Projects Show Atlanta's Steady Growth

Left, Davison-Paxon-Stokes (affiliated with R. H. Macy, of New York) new store; right, Norris office building, two of Atlanta's large construction projects going steadily ahead.

Construction on two of Atlanta's largest projects, Davison-Paxon-Stokes' new store and the Norris building is forging steadily ahead through the hot summer days. With building continuing at its present rate, Atlantans out of the city on their vacations will return to find their city growing more than ever like a little New York, and far and away the metropolis of the south.

Davison-Paxon-Stokes, affiliated with R. H. Macy & Co., of New York, and one of Atlanta's outstanding department stores, anxiously watches the progress being made on the new store, which will be one of America's prominent department store structures when completed. It represents an investment of $7,000,000, the building alone costing more than $3,000,000.

With construction work on the Norris building, on Peachtree, between Cain and Harris streets, nearing completion, Bowie Martin, vice president of the Guaranty Realty company, which is exclusive renting agent for the building, announced Saturday that rentals have easily kept pace with the construction. "We have rented approximately 60 per cent of the space in the Norris building," Mr. Martin said, "and at present we have many prospects lined up, so that I shall not be surprised to see the building completely rented by the time it is ready for occupancy."

Between the middle of September and the first of October is the time set by Mr. Martin as the probable date of completion and occupancy of the new Peachtree structure. In running over the list of tenants who have rented space in the Norris building, Mr. Martin mentioned the following: Piedmont Bank & Trust Co. will occupy the ground floor; Norris, Inc., seventh floor; H. H. Jarrett & Co., manufacturers' agents; Colly-Wynich, manufacturers' agents; Coca-Cola Bottling company; Monarch Manufacturing company; King-Leonard, general agents; McIntyre-Scott-Knight & Co.; American Mutual Liability Insurance company; Whitehead Realty company; Guaranty Realty company; Pringle-Smith, architects; R. S. Monday, architect; R. G. Lose, engineer; Kalamazoo Loose Leaf Binder company; Keenan & Chambers Realty Co., and S. J. Hayes, attorney and public accountant.

MRS. CORBITT ENTERS NEW BUSINESS FIELD

Mrs. Matilda Dick Corbitt, manager of the house department of B. M. Grant company, will add to her present services the selling of high class homes, according to announcement of B. M. Grant, president of the company. Mrs. Corbitt will undertake her new duties immediately.

Two years ago Mrs. Corbitt instituted the house department and has developed it to such an extent that many of her clients are now ready to buy and insist that she look after their interests in purchasing homes. Mrs. Corbitt said she is planning to enlarge her staff in accordance with her new duties.

Prior to entering the real estate business Mrs. Corbitt was for several years advertising manager of the Oil Miller, a trade paper of the cottonseed oil industry. At national conventions of the cottonseed oil industry she was often called upon to make addresses, and it is stated that when connected with the Oil Miller she was one of the best informed women in the country in the cottonseed oil business.

Feeling that a broader field was open to her in real estate, Mrs. Corbitt came to the B. M. Grant company two years ago, bringing to her new work the enthusiasm and earnestness for a complete knowledge of the subject which had marked her connection with the cottonseed industry.

Mrs. Corbitt's outstanding success in real estate is due in no small measure to the personal interest and attention given each client, and to her never failing courtesy and pleasing disposition. Few women in so short a period have achieved the results accomplished by Mrs. Corbitt within a business career covering only six years. Her many friends will be delighted to learn of her promotion and extended activities into the field of sales.

SHOUP INAUGURATES NEW PUBLICITY POLICY

Richard C. Shoup, president of Richard C. Shoup & Associates, Inc., Atlanta realtors, inaugurated something new in the way of real estate publicity when he began his series of "Mr. Fact says" in his Constitution advertisements. Mr. Shoup has secured the exclusive Atlanta rights for this feature which is syndicated by Abbott & Walker, Inc., of New York.

In commenting on his real estate policy, Mr. Shoup said ,we have always kept our skirts clear of large developing and subdivision projects, believing in that way we can best serve our clients in general brokerage, to which we devote our entire attention.

REALTY CONCERN SELLS BUILDING LOT FOR $50,000

S. A. Massell, secretary of Massell Realty company, Saturday announced several transactions including a $50,000 sale. The building at 291 Whitehall street, now occupied by the southside branch of John Smith company, Chevrolet dealers, was sold to Mrs. L. C. Andrews for $50,000. The building has a 60-foot front and is 200 feet deep. The deal was made by Keenan and Chambers Realty company.

As part of the consideration to apply on the purchase, Mrs. Andrews gave a 26x90 foot lot on the northeast corner of Spring and James streets. The Massell Realty company announced that this will be built on at once for occupancy by a tire service station.

W. S. Johnson, agent for the Massell Realty company, sold a 25x100 foot vacant lot on Lakewood avenue, Lakewood Heights, to E. C. Shatterly for $3,500 cash consideration. Mr. Shatterly intends to improve the property with a building to be occupied by Brooks and Shatterly, automobile accessory dealers.

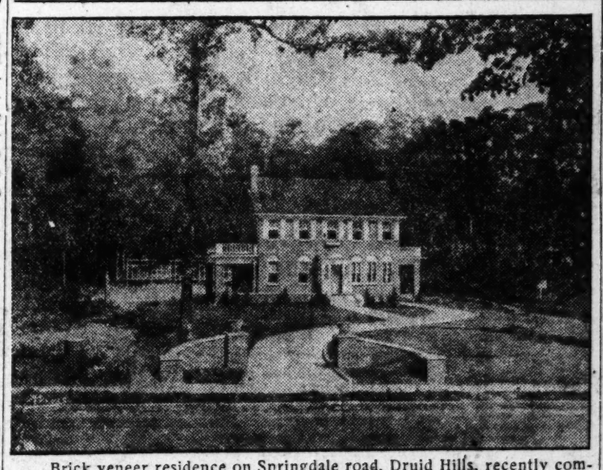

L. J. Wiemer, J. C. George and J. C. Peek, three Atlanta dairy men, organizers of the Model Dairy, will take possession July 15, of a building being constructed by the Massell Realty company at 81-83 Nelson street. They have leased the building for five years at an aggregate rental of $12,000.

NATIONAL GUARD ORDERED TO JAIL TO PROTECT NEGRO

Jackson, Miss, July 10.—(AP)—Twenty men of company F of the 155th infantry were ordered on duty at the county jail at Clarksdale by Adjutant General Curtis T. Green to protect Sylvester Mackey, negro, charged with the shooting of Deputy Sheriff Rank Smith near Greenwood.

The troops were requested by Sheriff Glass, of Coahoma county, in a message to Governor Whitfield. Major T. J. Birdson and Captain Z. S. Adkins are in charge of the armed guard.

The negro was placed in the jail at Clarksdale for safekeeping following a demonstration at Greenwood Wednesday night.

Smith died as a result of wounds sustained in the shooting and Mackey will be tried for murder at a special term of Leflore county circuit court on July 26.

MOTHER AND SON BUILT VILLAGE, NOW DESERTED

Shelburn, N. H., July 10.—Secluded in the woods near here is a deserted village—the largest building of which is scarcely more than a doll house.

Protected by giant trees, this tiny town was inhabited for 24 years by H. R. Moller and his mother, who came in 1901 after Moller's health had failed. Their visit, intended for one year, lasted nearly a quarter of a century.

During this time Moller built the entire village. The church, with its tiny belfry and bell that rang on Sundays to let the people in the valley below know that the village was still inhabited, the temple of music, theater, general store and post-office—all of these are of wood from the surrounding forest, cleverly fashioned and each representing a distinct type of architecture.

Every year, as the builder conceived new ideas, the town grew. There were cabins for himself and his mother, a guest house and many trellises, benches and rustic bridges.

Two years ago Moller was killed by a falling tree. After his death his mother left the village and has never returned.

Improvements Planned in Oakdale Estates

Scene on Oakdale Estates, being developed by Southern Realty and Trust corporation.

Improvements planned for Oakdale Estates on Wieuca road will make of this subdivision one of Atlanta's beauty spots. In the development program reported by F. W. Connell, sales manager of the Southern Realty and Trust corporation, are a $300,000 country club, two lakes, tennis courts and a club for tennis players exclusively.

The country club on which work will begin in the next thirty or sixty days, will compare favorably with others throughout the south. A feature of it will be the swimming pools and turkish baths. The two lakes are to be based for boating, fishing and swimming. The tennis courts will be laid out on an extensive scale. Mr. Connell is looking forward to a big season with the Oakdale Estates.

"BROTHER" JOHN RETURNS TO U. S. FROM HAWAII TRIP

San Francisco, July 10.—"Brother John," whose surname is Nash and who styles himself the "Israelite messenger of God," has returned to the United States willing to face a chance of being locked up on insanity charges.

"Brother John" has been confined twice because people got the idea that he was "a little off," he declared upon arrival from Honolulu, where he engaged in a two-year preaching campaign.

Barefooted and bareheaded, he was dressed in loose white robes and carried a banner perched on the end of a six-foot staff. A trumpet was slung about his neck.

"My home is in Emoryville, W. Va.," he said. "They think I'm crazy back there. In reality I've been doing a lot of good in Hawaii and am as sane as anybody."

Why Do all Manufacturers of Good Cars Grind Their Motors? Boring is 40 Per Cent Cheaper!

ANSWER: Because Grinding is the only "RECOGNIZED STANDARD" way of accurately finishing Cylinder bores to exact size and finish. When Cylinder bores become worn "out of round" and tapered the only "RECOGNIZED STANDARD" way of refinishing is to "REGRIND." You would not take your watch to a blacksmith! Do not be misled by mechanics who tell you that they can install so-called leak-proof rings that will seal out of round cylinder bores. This is only a quick way of the mechanic making some "easy money," which is only "temporary" relief to your motor. Such rings have "inner rings" or springs under them which causes excessive friction on cylinder walls, causing cylinder walls to wear rapidly, undue wear on crankshaft bearings and will increase your repair bills.

VISIT OUR MODERN EQUIPPED GRINDING SHOPS AND LET US "SHOW YOU," or call us by phone and let us tell you about it.

THE BEST IS ALWAYS THE CHEAPEST IN THE LONG RUN. Ask your Garage Man.

BOOK REVIEWS IN TABLOID

SYLVIA THOMPSON.

The Hounds of Spring, by Sylvia Thompson, a writer of 24 years of age, was one of the big novels of the spring and now that summer has come it is still being widely read and thoroughly enjoyed. Several years ago two other books were published by Miss Thompson, but they did not awaken any special interest here or in her own country.

The inscription on the title page is unusual in which the author says: "This book is dedicated to the mind of H. G. Wells and to Peter Luling," the latter, by the way, being her fiance, and an American art student whom she met at Oxford.

The writer of this unusual story was born in Scotland and numbers among her ancestors Oliver Cromwell. She was educated at Cheltenham and Somerville and Oxford, and lives at Lyndehurst, near London. Last year the writer came to the United States as a member of the British delegation to the 23d interparliamentary congress at Washington.

Since the great war there have been many novels by writers who fought through the war and who have used it as a background, but she deals most conspicuously with the effects of the war, she having begun her writing in the year of the armistice and when only 16 years old. The report of the sale of film rights for 3,000 pounds (about $15,000) was received with a great deal of interest, and then came the news from England that she had sold the serial rights of her next novel for something like 2,000 pounds. "Hounds of Spring" is considered the best-selling novel of 1926. (Published by Little, Brown & Co., of Boston.)

Sylvia Thompson Engaged.

To the above the following social item is included: "Word has been received in Boston that Miss Thompson, the 23-year-old author of "The Hounds of Spring," now in its 43d thousand, will marry an American art student, Peter Luling, in July.

NEW FICTION.

The Tents of Jacob, by Hyman Cohen, is a story that presents a race. It is the drama of the Jewish people. It tells the story of how they lived and how they died, and of the dreams they followed.

The story is located in a small Jewish village, of which it is said "in this novel in a village in White Russia, the children of Israel enter into a simple and complete existence. In Zemliana they achieve a racial, social, economic and communal unity. Here they are the exalted and the outcast, the well-to-do and the ne'er do well, the great and the lowly.' (Robert M. McBride & Co., New York.)

Common of Angels, by Dorothy A. Beckett Terrell, a story of married life which has been the basis of quite a number of interesting arguments in and out of the family circle.

It is based on the two outstanding subjects—love and religion—which has been the chief conflict between families and lovers since Adam and Eve tried to settle their difficulties.

The leading characters are Barbara Lacy, and the man to whom she is engaged, Gil Mallory, a young sculptor. Appearing upon the scene and changing its beautiful coloring, is another artist by the name of Jehane Drewe, who proves too fascinating to the young sculptor, so the colorful dream of love in a cottage with Barbara topples over like a house of cards, and he suddenly marries Jehane. And while the drifting of the ways naturally makes Barbara sad she finds contentment in her religion and continues to be what she has always been, a true and lovely young woman. Later comes the shipwreck of the whirlwind marriage, and he turns to Barbara who still loves him, and here comes the battle between love and faith. (D. Appleton & Co., New York.)

The Mantle of Masquerade—Laughter, love and mystery, by Stuart M. Emery. Just the book to read after all the bon voyage letters have been read, the candy has been consumed, the flowers have faded, as well as the memory of the many faces of the shore, simply nothing left but books and memories, and, as the young traveler does not want to think, nothing will prove more entertaining than Terry Warren's Uncle Charley, who was making unusual preparation for a trip to Europe, during which exertion he was surrounded by the following characters, whom the reader will no doubt enjoy meeting:

The first introduction will be to Terry Warren, the delightful young nephew who gave his uncle the information that he must not worry, for "I can run Cloverdale all right, and it will be here when you get back."

Wanda Moore, a young actress—and in this connection "some take the high road and some take the low road—and that's the way it is."

Mrs. Vandeventer Fredericks, a perfectly poised, non-poisonous house-party chaperon and with the air of "I am on old friend of your Uncle Charles and should know how to select guests for his home."

Maude Renwick, a young heiress, and Joe Hodge, a roving guest, and one or two others.

Uncle Charlie Peebles I have left to the last. He is master and owner of Cloverdale, in the truest sense of the word, and whose bont was suddenly laid up for repairs just as suddenly returned to his home to find it filled with guests, and to each and all he gave the cordial invitation to vacate just as soon as possible.

A very humorous story, cleverly written, and the style will suit our summer days. (E. P. Dutton & Co., New York.)

The Bandit Prince. By Sessue Hayakawa, who is said to be one of the most striking personalities of the day—a distinguished screen and stage star. In this story again is the blending of the Orient and the Occident. It is an intensely interesting love story of the east and west—the background the beautiful city of Paris and Pekin with its wonderful charm.

It is the workings of two worlds—both fighting for power—in China. The story is filled with excitement in which love, adventure, mystery and suspense combine to make the climax one to be remembered. (Macaulay Company, New York.)

But in Our Lives. By Sir Francis Younghusband, is a novel of remarkable strength. On the title leaf he quotes the following lines:

"That we shew forth thy praise not only with our lips, but in our lives; by giving up ourselves to thy service, and by walking before thee in holiness and righteousness all our days."

It is the story of Evan Lee, who was sent to India from England when quite young, and it is of conditions and the mode of his new life that the writer has made the foundation of the story. The sister of Evan Lee at the beginning of the great war asked Colonel Barkley to write the story of Evan Lee's life, which has been done and of which he says: "If not a single man or woman ever read this book I would not regret the labor on it." (D. Appleton & Co., New York.)

JEFFERSON AND HAMILTON.

The Struggle for Democracy in America. By Claude G. Bowers, is a volume that is attracting American-wide attention, statesmen, historians, critics, in fact men from all walks of life who are good citizens unite in praise of this book which has probably led to the sale of four large printings within four weeks. Among the comments made by prominent men The New York Tribune says "It is the most interesting book that has ever been written about the two greatest antagonists this country has ever produced."

Senator Beveridge says that "it is the best story of the origin of Jeffersonian democracy that has been published. Stirring facts they are—stirring as life itself." This is followed by a comment by William G. McAdoo, in which he says "Bowers has the art of making dead people live and move as flesh and blood again. He has disclosed a keener understanding of political psychology than the average historian." Senator Borah says in an interview "It is not simply a biography of two men. It is a political history of the time. The great issues and policies are discussed and the relationship of the leaders of these policies fully revealed. Every figure is distinct and lifelike. The book covers a stirring period."

No volume of recent date will be more warmly welcomed than the volume of Jefferson and Hamilton, written by Claude G. Bowers. He very clearly shows that he knows of what he writes. It is a valuable volume for every home library, but more than that it should be in the library of every American newspaper and in the public libraries of the whole country.

Mr. Bowers is to be congratulated for his most valued contribution to the generation of today. It is not only entertaining but it bears the earmarks of truth and fairness. G. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., New York.

MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS.

Our American Cardinals. By James J. Walsh, who tells most interestingly the life stories of the seven American cardinals—McClosky, Gibbons, Farley, O'Connell, Dougherty, Mundelein and Hayes, "whose ideals as exemplified in every day life give them a place beside their great colleagues as Mercier of Belgium." D. Appleton & Co., New York.

Italy Under Mussolini. By William Bolitho, whose opening sentences are as follows: "The frontage of fascism is solid and high. They have built it specially to hide many things that are interesting to the world. And the main force of its makers are stretched to stop intruders or critics from finding out what is behind. It is hard and a little dangerous to outwit them, for fascism has turned every tenth man and woman in the country into a spy or informer in its interest."

M. Bolitho bases the above remarks on his personal observations throughout Italy. The book is worth reading. The MacMillan company.

America and Germany. 1918-1925. By Sidney Brooks, who says it was written for all who are interested in the progress of Germany. He closes his story with a discussion of the Dawes plan. The MacMillan Co., New York.

Revelation in the Light of History and Experience. By Herman Mackensen, of which Rev. F. H. Knubel says: It commends itself as a most unusual and stimulating presentation of the religion of Israel, etc. The Stratford company, Boston.

If You Must Cook. By Jennette Lee, who wrote the charming book "The Taste of Apples," etc. The author was for twelve years a professor of English in Smith college, and the time came when it was necessary for her to assume the responsibilities of the home she realized she was up against a problem. But it was not the first problem that she had worked out and having done this successfully the brides and housekeepers as a whole should thank her for this splendid contribution. It makes home life worth living—if you must cook. (Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.)

CURRENT MAGAZINES.

Current History for July is a most entertaining number. Among the interesting subjects discussed are "The Church and the State Conflict in Mexico," which includes "The American Protestant View," by James Cannon, Jr., bishop of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and "The Mexican Official View." Mexican ambassador to the United States, Manuel C. Tellez. There are also several other articles on conditions in Mexico; "Industrial Welfare Movement Sapping American Trade Unions;" "The World-wide Problems of Over Population," by a professor of Harvard university; "Ellen Key's Ideals of Love and Marriage;" "West Point of Today;" "Armies and Navies of the World," etc. There are also several short stories of interest.

The Antiquarian which easily paved its way into the home lovers library with its first issue, is unusually entertaining this month, among the subjects are "Undiscovered Antiques;" "The First Mirror;" Old Salem, Mass., 300th anniversary which began last Sunday to celebrate the occasion, Decorators Problems; The Gateleg Table; Interior Decorators Use Many Antiques, etc. There are many full page and half page illustrations which makes the July issue most attractive.

Scribner's Magazine for July is filled with selections suitable for the month and the time. Boyden Sparkes writes on "Uplifters and Politicians," and Raymond Walters discusses the subject, "Are the Summer Schools Time Wasters?" "The Spirit of Independence—as revealed in the letters of the time (1776)," is another interesting article, and then there are many more which come under the head of historical, political, foreign, financial and art, all of which will interest the reader.

The Forum for July has a most interesting article entitled "Has Youth Deteriorated?" It is debated by two college girls who handle the subject most interestingly. Thomas Boyd discusses the Klan; Emil Ludwig has written a biography (1st installment) on Wilhelm Hohenzollern; Rose Macaulay being in a meditative mood decides to let her pen wander around on the subject of "Love," "Prohibition and Caste," is another subject which is written in an interesting style, and there are still others, all of which makes this a number for readers of many minds.

LITERARY DRIFTWOOD.

Aldous Huxley has been in this country. There seems to be no subject beyond his ken; he discussed with reporters the British labor situation, American plays, Mr Mencken, the Philippines and Charlie Chaplin. Urbane, witty, a "shy young sophisticate" as one interviewer termed him, he was friendly and gracious to everyone. No reader of his last book, "Two or Three Graces," can fail to appreciate the satirical yet pitying spirit of its writer. This clever Mr. Huxley, known as the most learned man in England, has returned to his home from a trip around the world without consenting to give a single lecture in the United States!

A man who has written many successful novels and short stories, whose name is well known to all readers of western and adventure fiction, has taken unto himself a pseudonym. "The Loom of the Fool," to be published in August, will be listed as written by one Austin McLeod. The author attempts to speak for the vast multitude of people who have been baffled by their environment, and he expresses, perhaps, the struggle of his own life for the beauty and freedom of the world.

Miss Rebecca West, who has been living in Italy with Miss G. B. Stern, the English novelist, will return to America soon, where she expects to live in the future.

Mrs. Amabel Williams-Ellis, author of "Noah's Ark," announces that she has completed two-thirds of her new novel under the most trying circumstances. During the time she was writing, her three young children had the whooping-cough, and in addition to nursing them, she managed her three houses, one in Chelsea, one in Surrey and one in Wales. Mrs. Williams-Ellis is an active and popular member of London's younger literary and artistic set.

Announcement is made that Stephen Vincent Benet, author of "Spanish Bayonet and Tiger Joy," has been awarded one of the Guggenheim memorial fellowships for the year 1926-27. These fellowships are open to any artist, musician, writer, scientist, research worker, or scholar who can present a logical plan for study for the year.

"Portrait of a Man With Red Hair," Hugh Walpole's novel, has been dramatized and will appear soon on the English stage. Mr. Walpole expects to come to America very shortly for another lecture tour. By the time he arrives, however, his new novel, "Harmer John," will have been released, the story of a man who had such a passion for cleanliness that he made it a religion, and established his cult in the cathedral town, to the consternation of its citizens.

"The Blindman Prize" of $250, offered annually through the Poetry Society of South Carolina, in commemoration of Hervey Allen's war poem, "The Blindman," has been awarded this year to an Englishwoman, Ruth Manning Saunders, of Trevaylor, Buryas Bridge, Penzance, Cornwall, England, for her poem, "The City." The judge of the present contest was Jay B. Hubbell, editor of the Southwest Review. This is the first time that the prize has been awarded to a poet abroad. Honorable mention has been given to the following poets: Grace Hazard Conkling, Karle Wilson Baker, Isabel Fiske Conant and Margery Swett.

Daniel Defoe, author of "Robinson Crusoe," was born in London in 1661

FISH AND GAME CONFERENCE HELD

Mobile, Ala., July 10.—(AP)—State game and fish commissioners from four gulf states, members of the Mississippi oyster commission, and game wardens are in session here today, discussing reciprocity of fishing in state waters and the application of state conservation laws to coastal waters. The session lasted one day and concluded this evening.

The conference was called to order by I. T. Quinn, conservation commissioner for Alabama. Mayor George E. Crawford welcomed the visitors to the city and briefly told of the wonderful asset the sea foods of the waters of Alabama were to the state and said that he hoped that laws would be adopted that would benefit the industry and game in the various southern states.

Those present at the conference this morning were:

Florida, T. R. Hodges, Tallahassee, state shell fish commissioner in charge of salt water and commercial fisheries; J. D. Royall, state game and fresh water fish commissioner.

Alabama, I. T. Quinn, conservation commissioner, Emory Akridge, Mobile chief state oyster inspector; Ted Cottrell, chief game warden of the state, Montgomery; A. Z. Oberhaus, Mobile, district game warden.

Louisiana, E. A. Julian, director of fisheries division.

BARRETT MAY RUN AGAIN FOR SEAT IN U. S. SENATE

Grafton, Vt., July 10.—(AP)—John Barrett, once director general of the Pan-American union, a former minister to Siam and active in the formation of Coolidge-for President clubs, again may be a candidate for the republican nomination for the United States senate.

Mr. Barrett, who withdrew from the field when former Governor William W. Stickney announced his intention to run, came to the fore again last night on the heels of Mr. Stickney's withdrawal for reasons of health.

His decision, he said, would depend on advice of leaders of public opinion in Vermont and whether he is convinced that another pro-Coolidge candidate could poll a larger vote than Senator Porter H. Dale.

Hale and Ramsey Will Stand Trial For Indian Killing

Guthrie, Oklahoma, July 10.—(AP)—William K. Hale and John Ramsey, Osage county cattlemen, will stand trial in federal district court here July 26 for the murder of Henry Roan, Osage Indian.

The date was set at their arraignment this morning before Federal Judge Cotteral, who overruled a motion to quash the indictment. Both men pleaded not guilty to the crime.

BISHOP J. E. DICKEY TO PREACH TODAY AT GRACE CHURCH

Bishop James E. Dickey will occupy the pulpit of Grace Methodist church at 11 o'clock today, it was announced Saturday by Dr. S. H. Belk, pastor.

The bishop was president of Emory college at Oxford for 13 years and was formerly pastor of the local church. He was elected bishop in May, 1922, at the general conference at Hot Springs, Ark.

ALLEGED SLAYER DECLARED BETTER

Tryon, N. C., July 10.—(AP)—While Q. C. Sonner Jr., of Saluda, N. C., struggled desperately for his life in a local hospital, authorities today continued their search for the assailant who Wednesday night shot to death Jean Braswell, 17-year-old Tryon girl, Green Cove road near here.

Improvement in Sonner's condition was noted by physicians following a blood transfusion.

"Jimmy did it," the 21-year-old youth gasped out to rescuers attracted to the scene of the tragedy by pistol discharges.

Authorities, however, believe Sonner shot his girl companion and then turned the pistol on himself. Powder burns on his shirt and the direction of the two bullets which entered his breast caused authorities to doubt his statement that another youth killed the girl and then shot Sonner when the latter sought to defend himself.

Several young men answering the description of the assailant furnished by Sonner have been questioned by police, but all have established alibis.

CONVICT MUTINY IN KANSAS ENDS

Lansing, Kans., July 10.—(AP)—Mutineers in the mine of the Kansas penitentiary here capitulated early tonight and came to the surface.

The convicts, who had remained in the mine since yesterday, defying prison officials, gave in without having gained their demands.

The prisoners, 375 in number, have been in the mine since yesterday, refusing to come to the surface and have blocked efforts of prison officials to descend the shaft. Spokesmen of the convicts today made demands on Warden Mackey, including one that word of the granting of all demands be published in the newspapers under the picture and signature of the governor.

To these demands, the governor turned a deaf ear, and left to Warden Mackey the policy of starving out the mutinous prisoners. The answer was communicated to the prisoners, who, after a short time, induced one of the 13 prison guards, captive with them in the mine, to telephone again to the warden, begging the granting of the demands. Again the warden refused.

The demands listed include:

Liberation of men held for disturbance earlier in the week.

Immunity for the present mutineers.

Transfer of prisoners to a new cell house.

The men are in a long drift stretching 700 yards from the bottom of the shaft.

Air has been pumped to the mine from the surface ever since the mutiny started. Prison officials say they could obtain a quick surrender by stopping the fans, but as this would work as much hardship on the 13 hostage guards as it would on the men, they have not adopted the method.

Hunger and the futility of further resistance in the face of the stern attitude adopted by Warden W. H. Mackey, supported by Governor Ben S. Paulem, brought the collapse of the rebellion.

The convicts released the cage in the mine shaft, which they had tied down yesterday, and were hoisted up in groups of 12.

Shortly before they sent word over the mine telephone that they were ready to surrender, a threat had been made that the mine would be destroyed.

Warden Mackey held firm, however, and warned that any damage to the mine would result in prosecutions on charges of destroying the property.

W. Gleeson, one of the 13 guards who had been marooned in the mine with the prisoners, was the first officer to reach the top. He made a dash for the kitchen to obtain food.

As the convicts reached the surface they were immediately marched to the bathhouse.

After bathing, the 375 prisoners were fed and locked up.

Warden Mackey said he would take no action against the men tonight, but that a thorough investigation would be conducted next week and the guilty men would be punished.

Son-in-Law Held In 'Marauder' Death of Woman

Maryville, Tenn., July 10.—(AP)—B. M. Harris, divorced husband of Mrs. Bee Mason Harris, whose mother, Mrs. Sarah Mason, 67, was killed almost instanly by a marauder who entered Mrs. Harris' home shortly after 2 o'clock Friday morning, was in the Blount county jail Saturday, pending an investigation of his movements.

Harris was arrested by Sheriff Upton, of Monroe county, Tennessee, who turned his prisoner over to Sheriff Walter Pate, of Blount county, who, with a posse of deputies, had been searching the south end of the county throughout the day for the slayer of Mrs. Mason. The prisoner was found at his home, unarmed, and denied knowledge of the atrocious murder, saying that he had spent all of Thursday night with his father in Monroe county.

Mrs. Mason, who was a visitor in the home of her daughter, was shot through the brain as she fled screaming from the room she had occupied with her daughter when awakened by an unidentified man, who suddenly appeared and with a flashlight in one hand and a pistol in the other, commanded the women to remain silent and made certain demands upon them.

Mrs. Mason leaped from her bed and ran through the front door of her home. The intruder raced out of the back door through which he had entered and turning to go to the front of the house and the highway intercepted the aged woman, leveled and fired his revolver at her. The bullet struck her in the head. She staggered a few feet and dropped dead.

Bloodhounds lost the trail after following one from the back of the house to the highway, where it is believed the slayer escaped in an automobile.

Residents near Mrs. Harris' home said they heard an automobile at about the time of the screams of the women and the firing of the pistol shot. It was their opinion that the car was headed toward Knoxville, Tennessee.

During Friday it became known that Mrs. Harris was divorced from her husband last October. At that time she pleaded cruelty and said her husband threatened her. Her condition Saturday was such that she could give no coherent description of the slayer of her mother, other than that he was a medium-sized man, weighing 140 to 150 pounds.

The crime is the first of its nature that has rocked Blount county since 1923-24, when numerous homes were entered and two men, Luther Wells and Clyde Poe, shot down in defense of their wives.

CONGRESS TO GET NEW PROHI PLAN

Washington, July 10.—A proposal for an indirect referendum on prohibition, sponsored by a few wet and dry leaders, came to the fore today, and was frowned upon immediately by the Anti-Saloon league.

The plan is to submit to congress next session a resolution substituting for the 18th amendment a provision for state option on prohibition. This, in effect, would be an amendment to the 18th amendment, and would have to go through the usual course of constitutional amendments.

Provided the resolution were adopted, it would be submitted to the states for ratification on condition that legislatures which act upon it must have been elected after the proposal became an issue.

The proposal has been put out as a "feeler" and will be submitted to members of congress during the recess for their action. Its authorship is being kept anonymous.

The Association Agaist the Prohibition Amendment will push it. The Anti-Saloon league, on the other hand, will oppose any attempt to modify the 18th amendment, it was reiterated here today when officials were informed of the proposal.

Durkin Panning Fight To Escape 35-Year Sentence

Chicago, July 10.—(AP)—While Martin J. Durkin pondered in his cell today, a prison sentence of 35 years, imposed by a jury which found him guilty of murder for the killing of Edwin C. Shanahan, a federal agent, assistant state's attorneys moved to put the youth again in jeopardy of the death penalty which the jurors declined to inflict for the Shanahan shooting.

An indictment charging Durkin with the murder of Harold I. Gray, a police sergeant, killed in an effort to trap the fugitive after the Shanahan killing, is on the court calendar and may be called for trial, prosecutors said, in a new effort to get a verdict of death by hanging.

The jury which found Durkin guilty of Shanahan's murder early today had little difficulty in agreeing on his guilt, but deliberated for six hours on the penalty before compromising on the 35-year term. Only two jurors wanted Durkin hanged.

The Gray case has been regarded as less sound than the Shanahan indictment by several prosecutors, but the state's admitted disappointment in failure to win at least a life imprisonment verdict resulted in conferences today looking to the demanding of the death penalty for the Gray shooting.

Slain Last Fall.

Gray was slain last fall, a few weeks after the Shanahan killing, when Durkin who had fled eastward returned to the city and the police attempted to ambush him at the home of Lloyd Austin, an uncle of Betty Andrews Werner. Betty was preparing to flee with him to California. The plans to trap Durkin went awry. Austin and Gray were killed in the shooting, and Durkin himself was wounded in the arm.

It was generally agreed that Austin was killed by cross-fire of the officers, but the state charges that a bullet from Durkin's gun brought death to Gray.

Durkin may still find a legal channel through which to evade the prison sentence imposed today, for his attorneys will argue a motion next Saturday for a new trial, and will appeal to the state supreme court if that is denied. His hope of acquittal was mirrored in a letter to a girl acquaintance who had not come into the spotlight of Durkin's loves until Captain George F. Weideling of the Cook county jail revealed an intercepted letter from Durkin to the girl. Written last Wednesday, after Durkin had left the witness stand, the letter voiced the young man's confidence of acquittal and his promise to join, at the end of his trial, the young woman who told officers that she had come from New York to attend the Durkin trial, in response to a message from him. She visited him once at the jail during his trial.

Durkin said, after today's verdict, that he did not get justice. "I was tried for everything but murder," he declared. "It's a fine state of affairs when a man can't use a revolver to protect himself."

State Is Satisfied.

The state was much more nearly satisfied with the imprisonment verdict for Durkin than were the youth and his family. Durkin's mother, expecting acquittal, was hysterical when the verdict was read. She was led sobbing from the courtroom and said, "If I had a gun, I'd shoot Martin dead rather than let them torture him for 35 years."

Durkin expressed preferment for a new trial, with a chance of hanging, rather than serve a 35-year prison term.

Betty Andrews Werner, who was state's chief witness against her former lover, was not in the courtroom when the verdict was returned nor could she be reached to comment on reports circulated among her friends that she soon would wed Arthur Werner, father of her baby son, Jackie, and her sweetheart before Durkin. Known generally as Betty Werner, the girl never was married to the man whose name her son bears.

In addition to an indictment for the Gray murder, Durkin faces three federal indictments charging interstate transportation of stolen automobiles containing a total of sixteen counts. The indictments have been held in abeyance pending disposition of the murder charges.

Mrs. Budlong Expects Loss Of Case in Lower Court

:: EXPECTS TO CONTINUE FIGHT AGAINST HUSBAND ::

Newport, R. I., July 10.—If she is divorced from her millionaire husband on the grounds of "extreme cruelty," Mrs. Milton J. Budlong will carry her fight to the Rhode Island supreme court, she declared here late today after resting her case.

"I expect to lose my case in this court, but I am ready to follow it through to a finish," said Mrs. Budlong, who for four days has held society fascinated while serving as her own lawyer and handling her own defense.

Rests Her Case.

Today's session was scarcely more than a matter of minutes, the respondent abruptly resting her case almost as soon as the trial was resumed.

Mrs. Budlong, gaily dressed for the first time since the hearing commenced, told the court she would like until September for the filing of her brief, but Judge Edward W. Blodgett ruled her brief must be filed by July 20. He allowed the plaintiff four days thereafter for filing his brief.

The sudden termination of testimony was a keen disappointment to members of the 400, scores of whom had again packed the little courtroom to hear from the respondent's own lips the description of her 25 years of "misery in matrimony."

For some reason, the diminutive Mrs. Budlong preferred that this remain an unfinished story. Her unexpected action in suspending hostilities again demonstrated her keen sense of the dramatic, as it left society guessing as to what might not have been told.

Changes Costume.

Mrs. Budlong's concluding statement was short, simply mentioning the fact that Mr. Budlong had "left our bed and bedroom and our house, the Reef."

The right to cross-examine the respondent was waived by counsel for Budlong.

The millionaire's suit for "divorce from bed and board" is equal to separate maintenance. He has not been a resident of Rhode Island long enough to seek an absolute divorce.

Londoners Get Busy Tracing Pedigree of Morning "Tub"

:: HOW LONG HAS BRITISHER HAD HIS BATH? ::

London, July 10.—(AP)—A newspaper controversy has arisen here on the subject of when the people of England first got the habit of taking a morning bath.

Jerome K. Jerome, the novelist, started the controversy by stating in an article that there were no bathrooms in London homes before 1886. Elderly folk indignantly deny this and give dates to prove that when they were young, English people took baths occasionally at least.

One writer declares that in 1872 his family owned a tub that had a lid and a strap on it and was used as a trunk when the family traveled. Another writer—apparently from first-hand knowledge—says there were no bathrooms in Windsor castle in the time of Queen Victoria and that King Edward had several installed upon his accession in 1901.

It is also recalled that when the late Earl of Dunraven returned from America in 1886 he brought with him an American tub and Punch published a cartoon on Lord Dunraven's statement that "in American houses, an entire room is given over to the bath."

One writer claims that Englishmen make a good deal of noise about their morning "tub" but that American and continental hotel men say it is little more than noise. He quotes the hotel record of Zurich, Switzerland, to the effect that "almost every American asks for a room with a bath; 75 per cent of the French and 40 per cent of the Germans do so, but English even of the highest station seldom ask for a room with bath. They make use of the general bathroom for shaving."

:: TELLS HARROWING TALE OF SHARKS ::

Boston, July 10.—(AP)—A thrilling story of a two-hour fight for life against sharks and birds of prey in the pitchy blackness of a tropical sea at midnight was being told by officers of the British steamer Ripley Castle.

The big freighter was just south of the equator, bound from Philadelphia to Cape Town when Tony Madison, 20-year-old seaman, who had come to the deck for air, lost his balance and fell into the water.

In the darkness his fall was unobserved and he was not missed until an hour later. Captain George Sinclair immediately ordered the ship put about and slowly it retraced its course. About 2 o'clock in the morning faint cries were heard. Two buoys with flares were tossed overboard and Madison was seen struggling in the water.

When the seaman was pulled aboard both legs were bleeding from shark bites and his face was torn and pecked by great birds which had swarmed down on him, officers of the ship said.

The Ripley Castle docked here yesterday.

BENNETT AND WIFE GIVEN NEW TRIAL

Nashville, Tenn., July 10.—(AP)—The supreme court of Tennessee today reversed and remanded for a new trial the case of W. H. Bennett and his wife, Mae Bennett, convicted in the criminal court of Hamilton county of voluntary manslaughter in connection with the alleged death of Miss Augusta Hoffman, modiste, aunt of Bennett. Miss Hoffman resided with the Bennetts at their Chattanooga home for 25 years and disappeared mysteriously in 1915. The explanation offered was that she had married.

The Bennetts moved away from Chattanooga in 1917 and nine years later, when a human skeleton was found in a shallow grave under the basement floor of the former Bennett home, Bennett and his wife were apprehended at Rome, Ga., and returned to answer charges of murder. Bennett held a responsible railroad position at Rome.

The evidence upon which the Bennetts were convicted, the high court held, was circumstantial and no proof was produced to show what kind, if any violence had been committed.

It was held that the defendants were deprived of the presumption of innocence that attends every person accused of crime throughout the progress of the investigation of the trial court.

The Bennetts were sentenced to serve ten years in the penitentiary by jury verdict in the lower court.

Miss Hoffman failed to report for work at a dress making shop where she was employed on a February morning, 1915, and no reason was assigned for her absence. Friends forgot about her and memories of the middle-aged woman were passing when they were refreshed in the minds of neighbors upon discovery of the human bones.

In July, 1924, occupants of the house, 15 Bluff View, decided to make some repairs. While workmen were tearing up the basement floor the skeleton was found, covered with ashes in the crude grave beneath the floor.

Investigation of the grave revealed parts of a black and white striped waist, a wig, a plate of false teeth, a gold bar pin, a pair of shoes, eyeglasses and parts of a grey raincoat in which the body was wrapped.

Bennett claimed that his aunt resided with him, his wife and his mother, Mrs. Nancy Bennett. While they were in Chattanooga, in 1915, he testified at the hearing, Miss Hoffman left the city, asserting that she was going to marry a Mr. Brown at Knoxville. He said he had never heard from her directly since, but that his mother, who has since died, received several letters from her sister, Augusta.

TRIAL EXPECTED FOR OCTOBER.

Chattanooga, Tenn., July 10.—(AP)—New trial for W. H. Bennett, and his wife, Mae Bennett, whose conviction on the charge of killing Miss Augusta Hoffman, modiste, was reversed by the state supreme court today, will not be held before October, it was stated by counsel tonight. The accused refused to discuss the case for publication after receiving news of the court's action.

They are at liberty under bonds of $7,500 each, and preparations have already started to furnish new sureties, it is said. Since his conviction Bennett has lost his position as district freight agent of the Southern railroad at Rome, Ga., but is still residing in that city.

Attorney General George W. Chamlee announced today that new evidence had been secured by the state and that the case will be vigorously prosecuted on rehearing, he having offered his services to the new prosecutor to be elected in August.

CORNERSTONE LAYING AT ORPHANAGE SUNDAY

Miss Amy Chadwick, superintendent of the Leonard Street Orphans' home, announced Saturday that the cornerstone of the new building, now nearing completion, will be put in place at 4 o'clock next Saturday afternoon.

Cornerstone laying ceremonies will be conducted by the colored Masonic order, Dr. H. R. Butler, grand master of the state, presiding. Dr. W. W. Alexander, director of the commission on interracial cooperation, will make the principal address. A. F. Herndon, chairman of the board, and Miss Chadwick, the superintendent, also will speak. Music will be rendered by children of the orphanage.

The new building, made possible largely by gifts from outside Atlanta, is now under roof and the finishing of the interior is well under way. About $50,000 has been spent on the structure so far, and, in accordance with Miss Chadwick's expressed purpose when she started upon the enterprise, no indebtedness has been incurred. About $10,000 more is needed for completion and furnishing of the building and a campaign to raise this sum is being conducted.

The new orphanage will have nearly double the capacity of the old one which it replaces.

Hindu Mystic To Visit U. S. Next Month

London, July 10.—Krishnamurti, young Hindu mystic whom some theosophists expect to take over Christ's work where it was left off 1900 years ago, may be ready to begin his task of saving the world when he reaches New York on the Olympic August 18, Dr. Annie Besant, his sponsor and guardian, declared in an exclusive interview with the United News.

Krishnamurti is awaiting eagerly the beginning of his work, Dr. Besant said. This despite the fact that it will interfere seriously with his golf and tennis, of which he is very fond.

Dr. Besant and her fellow theosophists believe that a world teacher visits the earth periodically. In each case, they say—even in that of Christ—the divine spirit takes possession of an already living human.

The divine spirit is taking possession of Krishnamurti gradually, she said, but for periods that are now getting longer and longer each time.

"He may be ready to begin his teaching when he reaches the United States," she said; "though as yet the spirit would not retain possession of him at all times. For instance, if he traveled by train from New York to San Francisco, or took a similar long journey, the spirit would leave him en route."

About Wedding Invitations

These absolutely necessary articles for the wedding occasion are subject to criticism more than any other feature.

Even the wedding dress is not scrutinized so closely as the invitation, for the latter goes into the hands of strangers as well as of every invited guest and is apt to be considered the forerunner of the style which characterizes the wedding.

These days, most people are well informed concerning the requisites for stylish invitations.

The material of which the envelopes and sheets are made should be of approved shade of white; the shapes should be those that fashion has most recently decreed and the engraving should be done by artists whose reputation insures the highest degree of skill.

All these requirements are met in the extensive plant and forty years' experience of the J. P. Stevens Engraving Co. This house has established a high standard of product known all over the United States; the imprint of its name upon an envelope is a guarantee that the invitation is of correct form, latest style and finest quality.

If you are in doubt about any feature of the work consult this house before placing your order. Address J. P. Stevens Engraving Co., 103 Peachtree Street, Atlanta, Georgia.

The Rev. John F. Yarbrough, pastor of the First Methodist church, performed the ceremony in the presence of friends and immediate relatives. The house was decorated with garden flowers and growing ferns.

The lovely bride wore a becoming model of tan georgette with a tan hat and accessories to match. Her corsage was of blue and white larkspur.

'First Lady of Georgia' Tells Of Lakemont Sabbath Service

Mrs. Clifford Walker, first lady of Georgia, who returned last week from Lakemont, where she visited Judge and Mrs. E. C. Kontz, at their summer home, and was so deeply impressed with the Sunday services held there, that she has written the following interesting sketch of this religious feature which is a part of the regular routine and in the life of the Lakemont colonists, who foregather at the home of Judge and Mrs. Kontz every Sabbath.

By Mrs. Clifford Walker.

A broad terrace many feet in length, overlooking the lake and open to the evening sky; a balcony projection near the center forming a natural place for the speaker, and Judge Ernest Kontz standing just there with his Bible in hand talking of Jesus in simple affectionate words to a group of neighbors gathered about. This was the memory lingering from last summer which caused the feeling of pleasure when we saw Mrs. Kontz having a number of folding chairs again placed about the usual terrace rockers on last Sabbath evening in Lakemont.

The Fourth of July falling on Sunday, called for thoughts on national life and "Uncle Billy" Witham was asked to lead the service. More and more chairs were needed as the neighbors kept coming in and a most interesting feature that suggested old plantation days in the south was that a number of seats were placed on one side for the servants of the various Lakemont colonists. They were there, more than a dozen of them, with quiet demeanor and genuine interest in the service.

We sang "America," and that grand old hymn, "Faith of Our Fathers," and "Uncle Billy" read a scripture text addressed in turn to the children on the front row, to the parents, to the servants, and to those in authority—a direct message to each. Two young boys led the salute to the flag as it was upheld and then one of the men present spoke of the supreme importance of putting God first and before every other interest in life.

Appreciative Listeners.

Some one asked that the negroes sing one hymn alone and it was done without any hesitancy, for they knew they were having appreciative listeners in that southern audience. A prayer was offered by the host for mercy, for justice and for continued love, but before the group would finally disperse they felt they must have "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot" with its pleading tones and its final note of victory—"Comin' For to Carry Me Home!"

The service was over. Men and women from all walks of life had taken part—prominent jurists, successful business men, social leaders, a state official, quiet house-holders, all ages and the two races had worshipped together under the summer stars. Several creeds were represented but the same desire had been in the hearts of all. The God of the towering mountains had been one with the God of the vale. The shimmering water of the lake was His as was the ground beneath our feet—let the people be His also had been the spirt of the hour.

ATTRACTIVE WOMEN

If You Would Be Attractive You Must Be Healthy

A beautiful woman is always admired. There are many types of beauty. But no woman can be truly beautiful unless she is healthy. Radiant vitality is always attractive however plain a woman's features may be.

Many a woman has found her health improved through the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Weakness, loss of weight, and a pale complexion were a few things of which Mrs. J. C. Taylor of Box 211, Tallahassee, Florida, complained before she started taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. "I could not even sit down and talk to a friend for any length of time," she states. "I would forget what I was talking about and felt so blue." Mrs. Taylor is so pleased with the work of the Vegetable Compound that she keeps a bottle of it in the house at all times—and when it is empty, her husband makes sure that she has a new bottle. "I have regained my strength," Mrs. Taylor writes. "I can do all my housework now and I feel just fine."

Fashions From London and Paris

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

London, July 10.—One of the ladies of the royal family has started a new fashion for women's evening wear.

She appeared in the royal box at Covent Garden with a large rosette of rose-tinted tulle on her left shoulder instead of the ordinary posy of flowers.

Worn on the shoulder strap of her gown, the effect was striking, and already many society women have ordered similar shoulder puffs for their evening gowns.

Recent revival of the Paisley or Spanish shawl for afternoon and evening wear has induced arbiters of women's fashion to look around for something fresh for the society dame.

They have gone back as far as Queen Anne's time for their ideas and devised a shawl very similar to those worn in Queen Anne's days. It is a small affair triangular in shape made of bright-colored crepe de chine with fringes at the side.

Another old-world fashion has been revived to enliven the monotony of modern high and low waist lines.

This is the adoption of sashes for evening wear hung from the shoulder to waist and finished with a big loose bow.

Plaid sashes are very much in vogue, and mostly hang from the left shoulder to the right side of the waist line. Plaids also are being used in material for evening gowns, but usually the plaid sash is worn over a simple frock of white or light-colored material.

Artificial silk experts will earn the thanks of the modern miss by putting a new shower-proof stocking on the market.

"In this rainy climate city, girls either have to change their stockings after a journey to town or go the rest of the day with mud splashes showing on their flesh-colored hosiery.

The new invention, it is claimed, prevents mud and water from adhering and can be dyed any color.

Paris, July 10.—"Why have smart women taken to a sort of gliding step like a mannequin's walk?" queries a writer in a fashion magazine. Is this apparent imitation of the sprightly maidens whose life is devoted to showing off new styles merely vanity?

Not at all. The reason is that the heels of evening shoes now are made of crystal, or colored galalithe, and other transparent substances. The heel matches the necklace and they either contrast or harmonize with the color of the dress, which of course matches the shoe. A crystal necklace and crystal heels look wonderfully "chic" with black satin, and ruby or emerald with lame.

When the dinner jacket style for women was started over a year ago—it was the house of "Anna" that started it—it was met with more ridicule than admiration. Nobody realized the extent to which it would "catch on."

A great many of these costumes now are to be seen at the smart restaurants in the Bois de Boulogne. When worn by really elegant women, says a writer in "A. G. B." one of the leading magazines of fashion, they lose their slightly doubtful significance and are quite as pretty as the prettiest decollete. It is generally admitted that they go very well with short hair and the habit of smoking now so general among the sex.

One of the most effective seen lately was made of a sort of green silk rep with thread lame and was worn with a skirt of pleated gold in lace.

Attempts to make skirts and corsages fuller and move the waist upward have not been crowned with success.

The straight outline, with pleated skirt and jumper, has been in vogue for a very long time, and still has the preference over more complicated styles.

Influential leaders in the dressmaking world like Madeleine Vionnet and Paul Poiret, however, are endeavoring to bring about a reaction.

Mrs. John Daniel was hostess Thursday morning at luncheon in honor of Miss Lucia Smith, a bride-elect, whose wedding will be one of the outstanding social affairs of Thursday, July 15. The home was most lovely with an effective arrangement of summer flowers. The luncheon was served on the terrace at charmingly appointed individual tables.

Mrs. Paul McCash Is Tea Hostess.

Mrs. McCash having just moved into her completed home, this tea was in the nature of a house-warming, although given in compliment to Mrs. Jesse Seaborn Hall, formerly Miss Lu Su Ingram, a recent bride; Miss Dorothy Dorman, a bride-elect, and Miss Dorothy Smith, of Indianapolis, a house guest. Mrs. J. A. Bloodworth, Mrs. J. L. Cook, Mrs. William Ansley and Mrs. Harold Antrim assisted in entertaining.

Mrs. McCash received her guests wearing a peachblow taffeta with jeweled girdle. Miss Smith wore a Dresden silk frock in the de pompadour syle. Miss Dorman's costume was a sapphire blue georgette beaded in crystals and rhinestones. Mrs. Hall wore a yellow costume, crystal trimmed. About 100 guests called during the afternoon.

Miss Stephenson Weds H. Edward Neel.

City Boosting Gives Prestige To Advertiser

"Every business man is tied to his community. Every business is an integral part of the city or town where it exists. The greater the success of the business the more prosperous becomes the city. The more the city flourishes, the greater becomes the success of the individual business," Dwight S. Bayley set out in an article published in the June issue of "The Poster," national advertising bulletin.

"An advertising campaign recently undertaken by an Atlanta firm, H. M. Patterson & Son, funeral directors, thoroughly embodies and strikingly illustrates this vital principle.

"Five advertisements have been placed where the eyes of travelers will be certain to see them. Not one of the advertisements says a word about funerals or undertaking; but each sets forth by word and picture one of Atlanta's outstanding attractive features.

"One advertisement shows a remarkably fine view of Stone mountain, with the central group of the great Confederate Memorial which is now being carved on its precipitous side. Here appear Jefferson Davis, Robert E. Lee and Stonewall Jackson, followed by standard-bearers and other soldiers, the whole pulsing with life and action—a piece of sculpture which will one day stand supreme among works of that character. The lettering says: 'Stone Mountain, the Eighth Wonder of the Universe; 16 miles East of Atlanta.'

"Thus Atlanta is attractively advertised, and the only notice the advertiser takes for himself is the comparatively inconspicuous 'H. M. Patterson & Son,' in the lower right-hand corner.

"Thoughtful observers will be quick to recognize the unusually high quality of this publicity. The advertiser identifies himself with his city. He sings its praises rather than his own, yet is wise enough to know that the quality of his civic praise must reflect advantageously upon himself. Residents of Atlanta and vicinity cannot fail to react favorably to such delicate, indirect recommendation of himself by an advertiser who thus commends to the entire public his city rather than himself. In hororing his community he does himself honor. He is building prestige.

JONES TO DELIVER PATRIOTIC ADDRESS ON CAPITOL LAWN

Change in Dress Styles of Women Caused by Strike

BY MAURICE MERMEY.

New York, July 10.—The change in women's dress styles in the last decade from the hour glass effect to the straight line is partly the cause of the New York cloak and suit strike affecting 40,000 workers.

When the ladies shook off the corset and put shirrings and other gingerbread apparel wrinkles into moth balls, they simplified the manufacture of cloaks, suits and skirts.

It does not require a skilled artisan to sew together the simple stream line garments of today. This has resulted in a peculiar trade condition which is partly responsible for the walkout which has been ordered by the International Ladies' Garment Workers' union.

These statements are those of Morris Sigman, president of the union, who has watched the development of the industry for a generation.

The simplification of style has made it possible for jobbers to give part of their work to the obscure tailor, presser and dress-maker, according to Sigman. This broadening of the manufacturing sources has resulted in a cut-throat competition among sub-manufacturers—the small men who make the garments for the jobbers—and consequent reduction of standards of efficiency and living, the union head maintains.

The entire strike is built around this competition.

"Before the war women preferred tight-fitting gowns with high busts, shirred sleeves and other trimmings. With the advent of sex equalization and woman's taking her place side by side with man in the office and factory, the woman has sought more freedom in clothes. She doesn't want to be bound in a tightly laced straitjacket, nor does she wish to constrict her body so that the middle of it resembles the neck of an hour glass."

He pointed out that there had been a gradual evolution of style until, at the present time, we have the ultra-simple garment which stops at the knees.

"Anybody can make such a garment," he said.

The union is not seeking a return to bustles, shoulder padding and Elizabethan starched collars. It wants, Sigman explained, protection against the cross competition which is "bringing starvation to many workers."

The union wants the jobbers to guarantee workers a 40-hour five-day week during season. In this manner, Sigman asserted, the 40,000 garment workers will be assured work at that time. By cutting out the unskilled artisans and reducing the number of sub-manufacturers he said, this condition could be attained.

Mrs. W. L. Moore Made Chairman Of Membership Committee

Mrs. Wilmer L. Moore, under whose capable chairmanship the membership drive of the Atlanta Woman's club is enrolling prominent Atlanta women. She is one of the most cultured and prominent figures in Atlanta society. Photograph by the Misses Mead.

Membership in the Atlanta Woman's club has been greatly augmented during its recent membership drive through the zealous work of Mrs. Wilmer L. Moore, chairman of the membership committee, and her capable co-workers. It is probable that club will soon have enrolled 1,000 members, the goal set by this splendid organization, during its present regime.

Six new life members have joined since Mrs. W. B. Price-Smith took over the presidency, and these are in addition to the 51 active members secured. "We hope for a gain of 100 during the spring and summer months," said Mrs. Smith, "and 100 in the fall and winter. Prospects look very bright, since Mrs. Moore is receiving the hearty cooperation of everyone connected with the club."

Mrs. Moore, a prominent figure in Atlanta's civic and cultural life, is one of the most beloved and active members in the Woman's club. In expressing her sentiments, Mrs. Moore said: "I have so much love for and loyalty to our club that words are unnecessary. It is a tribute to progressive womanhood, and it is only seemly that all women's organizations in the city should hold meetings there, when possible. There is continuous work going on at the club daily. Not only is the clubhouse a place for recreation and enjoyment, but it embodies the art of home-making with the spirit of community building and uplifting. Every woman who has pride of sex and love for her city should belong to it."

Salient Points.

That those not so well acquainted with the club may know it for its good works and fine ambitions, Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Moore have set forth the following salient points in its favor: 1. It is non-partisan and non-sectarian. 2. It represents an organized center of thought and activity for women of Atlanta. It aids in the promotion of their mutual interests, and in the advancement of science, education, literature, art and benevolent projects. 3. It contains a definite group of women who at all times are ready and willing to respond to civic appeals, from community cheat drives to charter reforms and bond issues. 4. It provides two meetings each month from September to May, at which good musical programs are rendered, uplifting and instructive addresses are made. At these meetings, also, leaders of movements for the betterment of humanity, particularly such as affect Atlanta at large, receive an appreciative hearing, and are assured of helpful cooperation. 5. It maintains classes in literature, languages, art, domestic science, handicraft and physical culture for its own members as well as for other women who feel the need of these things, but can not afford club membership. 6. It carries on many forms of philanthropy for women and children, for prison and jail reforms, for hospitals, etc. 7. It provides a beautiful and spacious auditorium, much needed in Atlanta, for lectures, college theatricals, graduating exercises, etc.; a lovely banquet hall for private or public entertaining, and a clubhouse with many rooms for committee meetings, for work, or for recreation. There is also an excellent swimming pool for the enjoyment of club members and their families. In the summer season, this pool presents a picture of refreshing relief from the heat, and is patronized daily by members and their guests, as well as by the younger set. Swimming parties, luncheons and teas are in vogue and are solicited during the week.

Civic Asset.

There may be women in the city who do not care particularly for formal meetings, who are interested in their own charities, and who prefer entertaining in their own homes or in the clubs of their husbands. It must be remembered, however, that there are many women who receive needed stimulation from a club of their very own, such as this is, and who have no other place for entertaining than in a club of this kind. For this reason, if for no other, the Atlanta Woman's club has become a civic asset, filling a necessary and important place in the life of the community that no other organization quite reaches.

"When considering these things," said Mrs. Smith, "we believe that the women of Atlanta will feel it their duty to support this institution for the same reason and in the same spirit that the men of Atlanta support the chamber of commerce and their various lodges and clubs. Every progressive city maintains a central woman's organization. Our handsome club plant is second to none in the entire country, and we hope to keep up this splendid standard. Every woman's membership will be of great value to her and to the club, and we urge those who have not joined hands with us to do so at an early date."

Membership Committee.

The membership committee is composed of the following ladies: Mrs. Wilmer Moore, chairman; Mrs. J. K. Ottley, Mrs. Ben Simcox, Mrs. Bolling Jones, Mrs. Shepard Bryan, Mrs. J. R. Little.

New members welcomed into the club include the following life members: Mrs. John Murphy, Mrs. Lee Ashcraft, Mrs. W. B. Price-Smith, Mrs. I. N. Ragsdale, Mrs. J. N. Renfroe, Mrs. Walter A. Sims.

Y. W. C. A. Camp Highland Has Interesting Features

Y. W. C. A. Camp Highland celebrated July Fourth with fireworks and a barbecued dinner, entertainments, music and stunts. The fireworks were presented by C. E. Allen, whose daughter, Marguerite, has been a member of the camp staff for five years, and is this season, a junior councillor.

Sunday, July 4, Mrs. Clarke, of Central Presbyterian church, came to conduct vespers and gave a very inspiring little talk. Mrs. Clarke was introduced to Highland by Mr. and Mrs. John D. Bansley, whose two daughters, Louise and Margaret, are members of the camp staff.

Of particular interest to Atlanta as well as to Highland is the arrival of Miss Sarah Ezell, from Nashville, Tenn., who will spend the remainder of the season as councellor at Highland before beginning her work as girl reserve secretary in Atlanta. Miss Ezell will take up her duties at the Y. W. C. A. in September.

Miss Leila Bagley came in last week from LaGrange, Ga., to act as head councellor for July. Miss Bagley has been a member of the camp staff for two years. Miss May Brooks arrived to act as senior councellor for July; Miss Virginia Knott, senior assistant; Misses Zelda Webb, Bess Weddington, Louise Toepel, Vernon Ogletree, Martha Brooks, Josephine McKnight and Katherine Bogman, as junior assistants.

While Highland welcomes these newcomers heartily, she says farewell with great reluctance to those who served her so well during June. Miss Bess Campbell leaves this week as June's head councellor. Miss Lois Hansard, who was senior councellor, has left. June junior assistants who are leaving are Misses Margaret Bansley, Ruth New, Frances Smith, Catherine Baugh. Miss Ray Knight, senior assistant, has left, also.

The week-end of July 4, saw several temporary additions to the camp staff, which need reinforcements in order to take care of the huge crowds of girls who poured in. Miss Clara Sapperstein, Miss Gilmer Daily, Miss Jean Gould and Miss Jennie Beth Sheffield acted as junior assistants for last week-end.

"How proud we are of our excellent vice president, Mrs. Marvin Williams, of Atlanta! What a splendid acting president she made the two months Mrs. Mary Harris Armor was away lecturing in other states!

"She helped put over that mammoth youths' prohibition parade on May day in her home city, which was a marvelous success; pushed the departmental and all the regular lines of work; organized new unions and gained new members for old ones, helped her district lead in this; spoke at local and district rallies; collected evidence showing the benefits in Georgia from prohibition for 'those Washington hearings;' was one of the leaders in the civic clean up of our capitol city; ever informing, inspiring, enthusing by word, pen and example; doing with her might what her willing hands, loving heart and trained intellect found to do.

"She fits in and fills any place or office to which she is called—for she is wholly consecrated, conscientious and capable and wise with a wisdom from above.

"Mrs. Williams' service to the Georgia and National W. C. T. U. through the years has been invaluable."

Book on Citizenship.

"Studies in Citizenship for Georgia Women," edited by Mrs. E. L. "It has been prepared with the idea of putting before the women in simple form the fundamentals of Georgia government," Mrs. Turman explains. James A. Hollomon has written a very interesting chapter on "Taxation," and among the prominent people contributing to the book are Honorable Hooper Alexander, Honorable John T. Boifeuillet, Dr. H. H. Ballard, John G. Pollard, LL. B., LL. D., and others. Wards all over the city have taken up the books and are selling them to members at the low cost of 25 cents and using them for their monthly meetings, and they are attracting wide attention. It has been highly praised by critics in New York and North Carolina has followed the example of her sister state and has just issued a volume for the North Carolina women, even down to using the same chapter heads. North Carolina has within the past few weeks sold over 1,200 copies. This book may be secured at the Atlanta league headquarters, 356-7 Candler annex, or at any of the monthly ward meetings, which are announced weekly. She also has a most interesting message to give, which every ninth ward member will wish to hear.

The Third Ward League of Women Voters will hold the social meeting at the home of Mrs. A. S. Moser, first vice chairman, Thursday, July 15, at 3 o'clock. Resume of Dublin Convention Of Children of Confederacy

BY MRS. J. J. HARRIS.
Sandersville, State Editor Georgia Division, U. D. C.

That "children are the keys to paradise," was most ably shown at the Children of the Confederacy conference which was so successfully staged last week in the wonderful city of Dublin. The social functions were brilliant in the extreme, the business transacted in a most praiseworthy manner, and the entire conference carried on with a systematic promptness, which these children's elders might do well to emulate. The charming little state president, Miss Margaret Bickerstaff, of Athens, won all hearts by her poise, her undoubted leadership, and her efficiency. At the suggestion of one of the state officers of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, a plan was arranged by which the publicity will be made a matter of pride and principle, and much enthusiasm was displayed over the new consideration. Archimedes said, "Give me a lever long enough, and a prop strong enough, single-handed, I can move the world." Such a lever is the press—with its "network of steel covering all worth while, and real," it is to us, in our latter-day activities, our greatest asset.

The social functions were most attractively carried out. On Thursday, a reception at the home of Mrs. O. L. Chivers was inspirational in that all was beautiful within and without the lovely home which opened wide its portals, and the meeting of old friends gave a warmth to the occasion which was most exhilarating. Mrs. Chivers, the hospitable hostess, impresses one with her charm of manner and a certain efficiency of bearing all her own.

Picnic Luncheon.

A picnic luncheon was served Friday noon by the Oconee chapter, U. D. C., honoring the conference in a most gracious manner. We realized upon this occasion that the hostess chapter excelled in the art of preparing and serving epicurean delights, as well as doing par excellence the great things that mean so much for the Georgia division.

When we speak of the Oconee chapter, U. D. C., and its super-president, Mrs. Izzie Bashinski, we immediately visualize big works accomplished, worth while activities planned, and the get-together spirit that puts the operation in cooperation. And it is not ill-timed to say right here that the yearly report read by Mrs. Bashinski by special request, on Friday evening, detailed the activities of the Oconee chapter in a most interesting manner and was one of the fullest and most instructive ever heard by the writer. It will be of real inspiration to other chapters and will appear in full later in the year on the official page. The Oconee chapter could not be a lukewarm organization with such a president at its head, and of which it is so justly proud, for Mrs. Bashinski has a personality of rare charm, combining efficiency, system and a most unusual variety of originality, with the rare quality of being able to secure the completion of any enterprise by her very own undeniable ability. It was the writer's pleasure to be guest in Mrs. Bashinski's beautiful home, and to meet her charming family and one has only to pass that hospitable threshold to feel that here as abroad her efficiency is carried out.

The Adeline Baum chapter, C. of C., the hostess chapter to the conference, is most flourishing and its brilliant little president, Miss Russell Brinson, in her gracious way, contrived to make each guest feel that it was a distinct privilege for her organization to entertain not only the conference but that particular guest.

It was most pleasant to greet the delightful little state officers of the Children of the Confederacy, whose duties seemed to weigh upon them quite as heavily as do the duties on the state officers of the mother organization, and their sense of dignified responsibility was charming indeed. The state officers of the Georgia division enjoyed the reunion and much pleasure ensued at the social affairs, when business was suspended, for after all, what is the Georgia division but just a great big family, working for the same cause, a veritable heart-throb of love? Mrs. W. S. Coleman, Atlanta; Mrs. W. T. Bankston, Roberta; Mrs. A. B. Lane, Macon, and Miss Adeline Baum, Dublin, were untiring in their efforts to promote the activities of the conference, and their work during the past years was manifested in the fruitage of endeavor and enterprise displayed. Mrs. Ellison Gilmore, Tenille, and Mrs. S. G. Lang, Sandersville, made most instructive talks along their line and added to the inspiration of the occasion.

Gifts Presented.

Miss Adeline Baum was presented with a handsome silk parasol by the visiting delegates, and a pen and pencil set by the Roberta chapter. Mrs. Bankston was given a beautiful vanity set by the delegates and an exquisite bottle of perfume by the Woodrow Wilson chapter, Roberta.

It is not necessary to go into detail over the winners of the banners and cups, as that was published last week, but it is of interest to state that the John A. Perdue loving vase was awarded for the third time to the Woodrow Wilson chapter, Roberta, which means that its pilgrimages are over, and that it now is Roberta's own. It affords universal satisfaction and was quite coincidental when the Adeline Baum banner was awarded to the Adeline Baum chapter, of Dublin. Miss Russell Brinson received the Ella Crawford prize of $10. This was quite gratifying, as Miss Brinson was hostess president to the conference and had been untiring in her efforts. The Mamie J. Miller prize was won by the Helen Plane chapter of Camilla, and the Dorothy Blount banner by the Woodrow Wilson chapter, of Roberta.

An al fresco tea Thursday afternoon delighted the guests of the conference. Mrs. Prichard and her charming daughter, Miss Margaret Prichard, were most pleasing in the role of hostesses, and the beautiful home with its broad terraces and well-laid grounds made a most impressive setting for an occasion of unusual interest.

It will not be stretching the point to say that, in our opinion, Dublin is harboring a second Marion Tally in embryo. This charming little vocalist, Miss Elizabeth Langston, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Langston, of Dublin, is only 11 years of age, but her voice, while carrying the even qualities of a much more mature singer, runs the whole gamut of scales in masterful fashion, and her rendition of "Oh, Mr. Piper," by Curran, at the conference Friday morning, was indeed a revelation.

The declamation and oratorical contests completed the plans for Friday evening. With so much talent displayed to the best advantage it is undeniable that the Children of the Confederacy contests make for the advancement of histrionic ability, poise, application to the subject, and greatest of all, love of country. Miss Brevier Marsh, of Dublin, was awarded the medal in the oratorical contest and was most charming—her rendition showing great feeling. Miss Margaret Naples, of Camilla, received honorable mention, having given her reading in a most accomplished and well-poised manner. She was awarded a special medal in honor of Mrs. Louise Kohn Baum for her excellence. Talmadge Barnett was awarded the medal in declamation, for he was most masterful in his delivery and showed great talent, which no doubt, some day will carry him far in his ambition. A sumptuous barbecue completed the rounds of social functions given by the Adeline Baum chapter, Children of the Confederacy, and closed the convention with many laurels for the hostess city, for it was plainly shown that Dublin did herself proud, not only in her mode of entertaining, her lavish hospitality, the charm of her women, and children, but in the genuine talent displayed in her younger generation. When we viewed these wonderful children upon whose plastic souls were being etched in letters of indelible character the magic words, love of country and patriotism, we realized that we looked upon the future standardbearers of our ideals. When we saw in their uplifted faces the light of purpose and the ambition toward nobler effort, we felt that when the time comes for us to fall upon our oars, the Cause will not be forgotten, for the majesty of its purpose ever will be incentive for these blessed children to carry on, so when a paean of happiness in our hearts, which thanksgiving to One Higher ever brings, we rested content.

Mrs. Harris Offers Loving Cup

At the suggestion of Mrs. J. J. Harris, state editor of the Georgia Division U. D. C., a plan was arranged wtih a view to increasing the publicity of the Children of the Confederacy at their conference which convened last week in Dublin. Mrs. Harris offered a loving cup to be awarded to the chapter of the Children of the Confederacy which sends to her the best and the most publicity for the official page next year, the decision of the award to be determined by a committee of three members of the Georgia Division U. D. C. The cup will be awarded at the next conference and will be a great incentive for the work. A resolution was passed unanimously to appoint a state chairman of publicity to communicate the news to the state editor, Mrs. J. J. Harris, Sandersville, so that she could make use of same on the official page for the ensuing year. The state president, Miss Margaret Bickerstaffe, was chosen for this most responsible position and was most enthusiastic over the plan, which is hoped and believed to be a great incentive toward the exploitation of the enterprise.

Report of President Children of Confederacy

The Children of the Confederacy organization has accomplished much this year, but there is always room for improvement. In these strenuous times of many activities, it is hard for those in larger cities to do much in each organization, for their interest covers a large field, but it is our duty, as Children of the Confederacy, to keep alive a cause so heroic and wonderful, those ideals for which our ancestors fought. We need more cooperation, my dear friends, and let us make an effort to have next year our banner year. Right after the convention, which was held in Roberta, I wrote each chapter urging them to send their pledges, pay state dues and work for a better chapter by increasing membership. Study southern history, and I believe every chapter knows the necessity of this. We, the Children of the Confederacy, all want that prize Mrs. Coleman has offered for distributing the most Confederate literature. We need publicity and plenty of it.

Your president attended the executive board meeting of the U. D. C. in Atlanta last January, and we want to show them that we are really awake. I suggest that each chapter get out a quarterly paper, telling of their activities. The Ellen Crawford chapter of Athens has already done this and it seems to awake much interest. They intend to have pictures of the chapter as well as historical facts and would like to have a picture of your chapter. Everybody may not be able to attend the conferences but they can serve in this way. Your president suggests that each chapter preserves a scrapbook. I am going to do my best next year—the best ever, and I will be sure you will do your part.

MARGARET BICKERSTAFF,

ROBERT E. LEE CHAPTER.

At the monthly meeting of the Robert E. Lee chapter of the U. D. C. held on Thursday afternoon, June 24, 1926, the minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved. The several committees and officers elected at previous meeting assumed their several duties at this meeting. Mrs. Turner Brewer was reelected president to succeed herself. This chapter by conferring its highest honor on Mrs. Brewer gives only that which she deserves.

There was no regular program for this meeting, but H. W. Powers, a soldier of the Confederacy, who honored us with his presence, gave us a short talk which was constantly intercepted with questions from the different members. Everyone seemed to enjoy Mr. Powers' presence, and his ready replies to their questions. All was fresh in his memory as he had just returned from the reunion at Birmingham. Mr. Powers and Mr. Bowen are the only living sons of the Confederacy residing in this city.

Central Presbyterian Bible Class Meets.

The chairmen of the committees of the Young Women's Bible class of the Central Presbyterian church entertained the members of their committees at a party at the church Thursday evening. Supper was served after which a short program was presented by the president of the class, Mrs. W. A. Upchurch.

Miss Frances Upchurch was heard in a group of vocal selections including popular songs, coon and college songs and old-time southern melodies. Miss Rosalie Wooten sang "The Summer Wind," accompanied on the piano by Mrs. Clema Wooten Talley. A "Tuscan Folk Song," a duet, was also artistically rendered by Miss Wooten and Mrs. Talley. "The Pudding," and "An Esthetic Housekeeper," by the popular reader, Miss Catharine Happoldt were enjoyed. A series of stunts in which the whole class took part furnished an hour of real fun.

The chairmen, who were hostesses of the occasion, were Miss Ethleen Lassiter, Mrs. J. H. Taylor, Mrs. H. R. Zimmerman, Miss Lular Fowler, Miss Hettie Brazell, Mrs. Amelia Wise, Mrs. T. D. Thompson, Mrs. Earl Slider, Mrs. Minnie Brown, Mrs. Gordon Thrash, Mrs. W. T. Mobley, Mrs. J. M. Hewitt.

Receiving with the chairmen were the president and officers of the class, Mrs. W. A. Upchurch, Mrs. E. S. Suter, Miss Frances Templeton and Miss Leona Stillman and Miss Ottis Brown.

Gordon Church Auxiliary Meets.

The business and inspirational meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of Gordon Street Presbyterian church was held at the church Thursday afternoon. In the absence of the president, Mrs. Rebecca Leedy, who is at Montreat attending the missionary conference, the meeting was presided over by the vice president, Mrs. O. J. Huie.

The devotional services were conducted by Mrs. M. J. Johnston, whose talk on "Visions and Dreams" was inspiring. The services were opened with prayer offered by Mrs. R. G. Lyon and closed with circle prayer. Mrs. Charles G. Norton, superintendent of the senior department of the Sunday school made a splendid talk on "Stewardship in the Lives of Our Young People." The minutes were read by Mrs. Irby Cook and the report of the treasury was rendered by Mrs J. C. Lewis. Encouraging reports from the circle and committee chairmen were read. The report from the executive committee electing Mrs. D. A. Carson as the new corresponding secretary was accepted. The meeting was closed with the benediction pronounced by Mrs. Harry Dean.

Fulton U. D. C. To Honor Veterans With Large Picnic

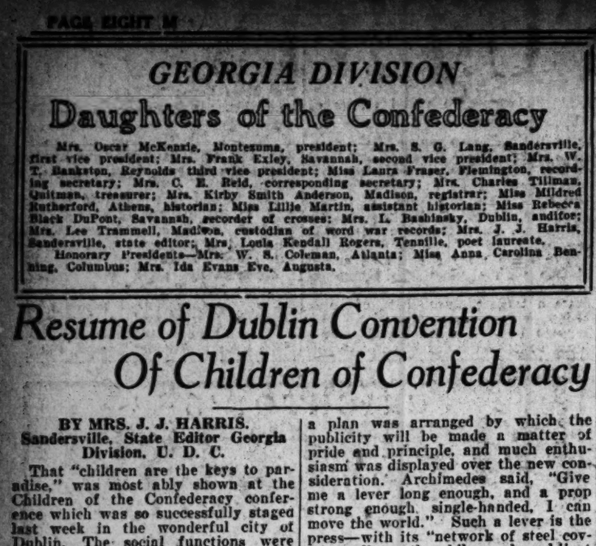

Fulton chapter, U. D. C., held its regular monthly meeting Tuesday afternoon at the Confederate Soldiers' home.

Only a short business session was held, with the president, Mrs. C. L. Anderson, presiding and the main item discussed was plans for the picnic to be given the veterans by Fulton chapter August 3, at Grant park.

Chairmen of the different committees for the picnic will be appointed during the week and all arrangements made to give the veterans an enjoyable day. Only one application for membership was made. The treasurer, Mrs. Gordy, made a good report of the chapter's financial standing.

After adjournment of business session the veterans were entertained in the chapel with an interesting program of music and readings. R. D. T. Lawrence, chairman of the board of trustees of the home, made a welcoming address. Miss Corinne Lockhart, of Sandersville, Ga.; Miss Laura Langley, Miss Pearl Hazelrigs and Miss Constance Merritt rendered piano selections. Miss Claire Hardin, the organist of Grace Methodist church, gave several appropriate selections, which were greatly appreciated. Mrs. Charles Maddux gave two vocal solos and led the audience in singing several old time numbers. Little Martha Sue Dillard proved herself a child prodigy in her manner of rendering three difficult readings.

Ice cream and cake were served by the home committee, Mrs. J. W. Kendley, chairman. The hospital was visited by several of the chapter members and beautiful flowers placed in all the wards.

Gradually Got Stronger

AN experience in the use of Cardui, which should interest every woman who suffers from similar symptoms, is described by Mrs. J. L. Russell, of Sewanee, Tenn., in the statement below:

"All my life my health has been very good. I have never been sick at all until two years ago, I had a spell with my back. I thought I was just worn out. I began to ache and for days I suffered with a dull pain.

"I had often read of Cardui in the newspapers, but I had little need of medicine, so I was not familiar with the merits of Cardui, although I had often seen the name. After I had endured the pain in my back for some days, I told my husband I thought I would try Cardui, as what I had read about it seemed honest and reliable, and it seemed to fit my case. He brought me a bottle home and I began to take it.

"After a few doses, I noticed I was picking up. I seemed to ache less, and I rested better at night. When I had taken my first bottle, I was able to sleep like a baby.

"Gradually my back got stronger again, and before long I was completely well. I am glad to recommend Cardui."

The medicine which Mrs. Russell took has been recommended by thousands of others because they had been convinced of its merit, after having taken it themselves.

Many Visitors Will Feature Social Affairs

Atlanta is a city offering such manifold social diversity that a summer spent enjoying the gaieties of the Gate City is infinitely more desirable than one spent out of town. The July calendar features a concert Sunday afternoon at Brookhaven, many spectators assembling at tables placed on the sloping velvety lawn, listening to the musical program, while rows of inviting green and white chairs attract others to watch the swimmers enjoying the cool waters.

Mrs. Farmer Draws Difference Between Rural and Town Clubs

BY MRS. IRA FARMER,
State Chairman of Home Economics for the Georgia Federation.

The world is awakening as never before to the fact that rural America has reached the end of an epoch and that a close and intelligent study and immediate remedial action as to farm conditions are necessary. And for the first time the value of the farm woman and the farm home is being generally recognized as a vital part of any economic force in the agricultural development of America. Mrs. Sherman has called for two million farm women as members of the general federation. She states she wants to establish a standard American home, and believes the place to do this is on the farm. The division of community service for the present club year set forth as its definite purpose recreation for rural women. The chairman of public relations gave at Atlantic City as the outstanding work for next year the betterment of agricultural conditions.

Best Minds Know.

The best minds know, however, that in any permanent, effective organization of any group of people must come from the inside out, and that rural clubs must be organized by the farm women themselves, and with only such cooperation and assistance from the federated town woman as will prove mutually beneficial. The rural women are just as able and just as intelligent as the town women, but in meeting of the two groups, until thoroughly coordinated, the superior training of the town woman, brought about by closer contact and by larger club experience, makes the rural woman self-conscious and not at her best. But one of the best clubs I ever saw was eight miles in the country, the membership made up of men, women, boys and girls, and impromptu debates on current events was the order of the day. At a conference of 16 farm women in Chicago in March, the women coming from all sections of the United States, there were two radio speakers, one member of the legislature, one national committeewoman, three newspaper writers, four lecturers and two poets. And if anyone gets a superior complex from living in town, she has only to remember that 92 per cent of our presidents, 91 per cent of our governors and 83.9 per cent of our cabinet officers have come from rural districts.

But with the present trend of financial conditions as effects the farm we shall ultimately have a rural peasantry, and it is this knowledge that has at last awakened business America to a danger that has been apparent for many years to the rural sociological student. If the character of the farming population is to be maintained at its present high standard, and this is necessary for the permanent greatness of our nation, (1) The country children must have the same educational opportunities as the town child; (2) Health conditions must at least equal those of the town child; (3) The farmer must have a fair return for his labor; (4) The farm woman must be convinced of the desirability of country life.

First Step.

The first step in organizing to bring these things about would be to make an inventory of the best things and quit exploiting the defects of rural life, so as to get a right attitude toward it. Then let the women of the community come together for an informal discussion of the needs of the community from which they can work out a program. There are certain fundamentals that would govern all rural clubs, but each community world have local conditions that would make up a part of any plans for improvement. But the first step in any rural community would be to secure a home demonstration agent if the county does not already have one, as the community councils organized by these agents are formed along the plans I have outlined. It is necessary to secure funds from the county to pay par of the salary of a home demonstrator, and do not fail to learn how the candidates for the legislature stand on an appropriation to meet the Smith-Lever fund that the state may pay its part of the salary. If the legislature would make an appropriation to meet the Smith-Lever fund, dollar for dollar, as was intended and as they obligated themselves in 1914 to do, there would be no need of the county paying any part of the salary, and Georgia is losing part of the federal funds by not doing this.

There are two decided differences in a rural club and the ordinary town or city club. The first is that the fundamental purpose of a rural club must be financial. The farm home has always been neglected for the farm for reasons into which we do not need to go here, and the farm woman, having none of the community projects which interests her town sister, will devote most of her energies to improving her home for beauty and convenience, and she must have an income peculiarly her own for this purpose. The other is that the summer months is the active period for the rural club, while it is the time of inactivity usually for the town club.

Rural Leadership.

The next move would be to develop rural leadership by selecting one of their own number who shows qualities of leadership as president, and never depend upon an outsider to fill this position. (2) Select some point as a community center, preferably the schoolhouse, though I have seen successful clubs which met in rural churches, in one designated home, and some are so fortunate as to own a clubhouse. (3) Having made up a program of work made up of the needs of the community as the women themselves have listed them, write to any organization which you think can furnish information as to how to proceed. The Chicago women listed 31 agencies which will furnish information free of all cost to clubs, and I will be glad to furnish this list.

Forty-three Problems.

The farm women at the Chicago conference brought 43 problems to the conference, which were combined under four heads: (1) Education—(a) Self. Make a survey of home to see how many conveniences there are for shortening the hours of work. It will be an eye-opener as to the amount of time women waste by antiquated methods, and could be cured at almost no cost. (b) Study their job of homemaking. (c) Realize their responsibility as citizens. (e) Children. Better schools and school teacher. (2) Economics—Income for the farm woman and girl; better marketing conditions, including better roads. (3)—Appreciations—An appreciation of country life, of her job as the greatest of all; and of music, books, recreation, trees and flowers. (4)—Community development. Set an ideal for the community and work toward making it a place financially, educationally and aesthetically satisfying to the boys and girls. Build up a community center and develop community enterprises, both social and economic. The trouble with the farmer has always been too much individual consciousness. Survey the community for crops that may be successfully raised and the neighboring market for the produce that is shipped in that can be raised in the community.

In West Virginia, the cooperation of town and rural clubs has been successfully worked out by establishing home industry shops in the county seats. There the produce and the cakes and other products of the country woman are sold with the needle work of the town woman. In many places these shops are placed in the town clubhouse. The town clubwoman can also materially assist in placing the canned goods of the rural girls and women.

The federated clubwoman can do no more worthwhile work than in assisting in every way possible to formation of rural clubs. But, when formed, the desire for federating should come from the clubs themselves. When it does these clubs are among the finest and most constructive of the Georgia federation, and their accomplishments have received national recognition.

Jail Improvement Report Is Given To Club Page

Mrs. J. E. McElroy, state chairman of jail department for the Georgia federation, makes the following report on the progress of this particular phase of work. She says:

"Our state president and my department chairman have been untiring in their encouragement to me in my jail work, assuring me of the great honor that will be mine, eventually, in doing this pioneer work. They also said I was "blazing a trail," as it were. Every one of you know that blazing a trail means going along removing bark or skin from trees, showing the route to be followed. Well, up to this time the major portion of skin removed has been taken from your jail improvement chairman.

"We have one of the loveliest jail systems, but we don't seem to get it enforced. Now, we women can no longer say that we are not responsible for the deplorable condition of some of our jails. We have equal rights now in enforcing all laws, and a woman who has really lived has often had to do things that were utterly repugnant to her. So why not begin jail visiting and it will surprise you how soon you will be deeply interested in this humanitarian work. I've written to every district president in the interest of jail improvement since last state convention three times and twice to those district chairmen connected with my line of work. Of the 12 districts, 10 have public welfare departments. The fourth and twelfth have no public welfare department. All have social and industrial division chairmen, except the 10th district. Only two districts have district jail improvement chairmen, the first and fifth, and neither of these two districts made any jail report at all to me.

Eleventh District.

"We have a new jail being built in Georgia that is said to be, when completed, one of the most up-to-date jails in the United States, if not in the whole world, and that jail is being built in one of our districts making no jail report at all. The 11th district has made the very best jail report of all the districts. The districts making no reports are first, fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh. The second district, by Mrs. W. D. Hargrave, reports 10 jails visited and supplied with magazines and various literature, and the prisoners are well treated and the jail kept in fairly good condition. The jails visited were Moultrie, Albany, Cairo, Boston, Camilla, Tifton, Donaldsonville, Blakely, Sylvester and Thomasville. The third district reported five jails visited or inspected. These are Fitzgerald, Cuthbert, Reynolds (by Mrs. Bryan, president of Reynolds Improvement club), Sycamore and Ft. Gaines. The eighth district reported Elberton jail visited and many acts of kindness showa prisoners, remembering them on special holidays and unanimously indorsed the grand jury recommendation that their jail be repaired and painted. The ninth district reports five jails visited and inspected: Winder, Lawrenceville, Gainesville, Toccoa, Clayton. The 10th district reports the following jails visited: Harlem, Lincolnton and Warrenton. The 11th district report, including splendid letter from Mrs. H. D. Reed, relative to the future jail work, is a joy to your state jail chairman, and realizing the influence it will have on other districts, I am going to include it in my report as received.

"From the small number of clubs reporting to the department of jail improvement, the clubs of the 11th district generally do not seem to be interested in the work included, not by way of unfriendly criticism, but as the statement of a condition. We feel, however, that interest in this phase of public welfare is in our district, as it is throughout the nation or throughout the world, only just begun. Our slogan from now until the next state convention is, 'A chairman of jails in every 11th district club.'

"Mrs. Rosa M. Foy, of the Folkston Woman's club, reports Charlton county jail as having been brought from 'nothing to fourth on the honor roll.' Through the splendid efforts of Mrs. Foy, who is also state chairman of public welfare for Charlton county, a committee of the foremost citizens assist in jail administration, and public sentiment has been so well educated that a new and adequate jail is soon to take the place of the old one.

"Mrs. J. S. Plowden, of Valdsota Woman's club, reports Lowndes county jail as in good condition. The club committee makes regular inspections and provides an abundance of reading matter, both secular and religious, for the prisoners' use. Mrs. G. V. Cates, of the Brunswick Woman's club, reports that the club sends magazines every month to the inmates of Glynn county jail. Mrs. U. L. Cox, of Baxley Woman's club, reports Appling county jail visited from time to time and fruits taken to the prisoners.

"Mrs. A. M. Lietch, of the Waycross Health league, reports Ware county jail in fair condition. Regular periods of inspection are appointed by their club and reading matter distributed. The committee is also collecting clean second-hand underwear, which the sheriff has agreed to give to the prisoners as the need arises. St. Mary's Woman's club reports that jail improvement for Camden county will be put into their program for next year. The 12th district reports jail visiting at Cochran, Lyons and Abbeville.

Report by Districts.

"This is the jail improvement report by districts, while I know many things have been done for our prisoners that were not reported to me. Let us get busy and make our jails clean, sanitary, well-ventilated and prisoners well fed, aiding the effort of those detained within our jail to readjust themselves, so as to be hereafter law-abiding citizens of whom we shall be proud. 'Stone walls do not a prison make, nor iron bars a cage,' but it takes a pretty strong determination for a prisoner in the majority of our county jails for his spirit to soar beyond their sordid surroundings and pledge to themselves a right-about-face if they are dismissed.

"I cannot close this report without speaking of the wonderful help and cooperation that has been given me by Hugh Fuller, of the state public welfare board. He has at my request attended club meetings in the interest of jail improvement, addressing the clubs on this subject.

Heads Vidalia Woman's Club

Mrs. Ober Warthen, president of the Vidalia Woman's club, who has been an officer and very active member since her entrance into the work five years ago. The club won the twelfth district gavel for the second time. A charter has been secured and plans for a nice clubhouse completed. Mrs. Warthen was Miss Inez Smith, of Perry, an alumnus of Bessie Tift college, and is a beautiful woman.

Mrs. A. McD. Wilson Praises Mrs. Jackson for Y.W.C.A.Work

Mrs. A. McD. Wilson, oldest surviving member of the Y. W. C. A., contributes the following tribute to the late Mrs. James Jackson, former president of the Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs and one of the pioneer workers in the Y. W. C. association, whose friendship Mrs. Wilson prized and whose work she valued in the following glowing tribute:

"There are lives that shine out like the morning star in its calm radiance reflecting glory light into the dark corners of the earth, while adding brilliance to the circle touched by their beneficent rays. Such a life was that of Mary Silver Jackson, as she shone resplendent among women. Gracing the highest social life with her brilliant intellect, sweet, gracious charm of manner and uplifting purity of character. Always ready to respond to any call for service, she manifested in all her walk in life the underlying principles which dominated every action—a life hid in Christ with God.

"It was a privilege of the writer to have met and known Mrs. Jackson in the more intimate relations of next-door neighbor, where she came as the bride of Judge James Jackson to Atlanta, to make her home in the old Hayden residence on Marietta street.

"Her beauty, dignity and charm of manner to which was added a gracious cordiality impressed her young neighbor, and inspired the young mind to cause her like Abou Ben Adam to seek, 'the peace with the great awakening light,' and to write her name as one who loved his fellowman, and that pure, high-minded life left an indelible impression. Later in life I had the pleasure of serving with Mrs. Jackson on various boards and committees along the line of Christian and patriotic service. Mrs. Jackson did pioneer work for Young Women's Christian association, when she assisted in the organization of the Gulf States committee and later was a charter member and president of the Atlanta Y. W. C. A. Here she gave devoted service in advancing the cause that would lead young women to Christ. This thought dominated her life and never was a day too long or the body too weary to respond to any call that came in the name of her blessed Master. Her voice raised in supplication to the Great White Throne led many a weary, worn traveler of earth to seek rest and peace, and her ministering spirit was ever manifest when occasion demanded. The dominant note of her life was charity that suffereth long and is kind and never was heard to fall from her lips harsh or unkind criticism.

"After retiring from the presidency she was made honorary president for life, and to the end she kept in touch and evidenced the keenest interest in all phases of Y. W. C. A. work. A rounded life full of honors and length of days. Truly, 'many daughters have done virtuously but thou excellest them all,' and with Tennyson she would say:

"'Twilight and evening star and one clear call for me.
May there be no moaning at the bar
when I put out to sea'."

MRS. A. McD. WILSON.

Mrs. Haden Pays Worthy Tribute To Her Friend

Mrs. Charles J. Haden, past president of the Atlanta Federation of Womens Clubs, paid a worthy tribute to Mrs. Jackson in the following words:

"It is not easy to frame into lifeless sentences the heart's appreciation of a friend. Although quite young when I first came to know Mrs. Jackson, the difference in our years was never felt. So companionable were our days together that whether at work or at play there was never a suggestion of a lack of fullest sympathy. This striking characteristic of Mrs. Jackson kept her young throughout her more than eighty ripe years. Although born in another state none ever knew that her life interests had not been always here. Few activities came to the public notice that did not at once enlist her sympathetic interest. Of strongest convictions, she would unhesitatingly declare her views, but if what she thought was wrong prevailed, her attitude would be to prayerfully persevere with an unbounded faith that 'God rules and all is well.'

"It was good to have known her, to have had the comfort of her friendship. After an absence from Atlanta of many years, and she was brought back to rest at last in her adopted state, the large concourse of friends that gathered, the silent expressions of love in the floral tributes were most convincing evidence that a life well spent lingers and lives.

"We count another friend in the realms above, adding beauty and love to that homeland in the skies."

Mrs. McElroy Issues Rules Regarding Prize Offered

Mrs. J. E. McElroy, state chairman of jail improvement department, issues the following rules governing the $10 in gold prize offered for the district making the best jail report in 1928. To the district jail improvement chairman, if the district has one, if not, to the social and industrial chairman, if the district has one, if not to the public welfare department chairman will be given $10 in gold making the best jail improvement report at the next state federation convention, where reports of state federation of clubs by districts are given.

The size of the district, also the accessibility of the jails to the club women, and the actual improvements and the number of visits will determine the award of the prize.

The public welfare board at the state capitol will judge and award the prize. District jail improvement chairmen must send in their report to this state welfare board two weeks before the state club convention meets.

Norcross Woman's Club Holds Meeting With Miss Lola Key

The July meeting of the Norcross Woman's club was with Miss Lola Key, at the home of her sister, Mrs. C. A. McDaniel. Mrs. H. H. Miller, the new president, presided. The librarian, Miss Lola Key, reported many gifts to the public library. She also gave a report of the recent ninth district convention held in Martin.

The newly elected president of the ninth district, Mrs. J. E. McElroy, displayed the ninth district convention flag with much enthusiasm. Every chairman of the Woman's club was urged by Mrs. McElroy to keep a memorandum of every achievement as a help to annual reports.

The music committee gave a patriotic program. Mrs. R. W. Morgan spoke of the inspiration of Francis Scott Key to write the Star Spangled Banner, which was sung by the clubmembers.

A historical sketch of "Why We Celebrate the Fourth of July" was given by Miss Frances Rainey. Mesdames Ben Summerour and Thomas Rochester gave piano selections. Mrs. D. K. Webster displayed pictures of patch-work quilts made in colonial days.

Many Interesting Activities Feature Harlem Woman's Club

The Harlem Woman's club held its July meeting at the home of Mrs. C. T. Irby, with Miss Brown and Mrs. Irby as hostesses, and was called to order by the president, Mrs. W. B. Clary.

The minutes were accepted as read by the secretary, Mrs. Augustus Davisson. Mrs. R. R. Hatcher, the treasurer, reported all bills paid, and a small amount put on deposit. Mrs. Sara Bell Fox reported an interview with the mayor of Harlam on the necessity of cleaning the streets of the business section Sunday mornings, and reported further that the mayor had gladly acceded to the request of the club, and had immediately set aside a sum to be used to defray the expense of the work. Mrs. Fox also reported that a reliable colored man had been engaged for that specific work, so that churchgoers would find an improvement in the streets.

Circulating Library.

Mrs. Arthur W. Eadson reported that she had seen the town council, and had obtained permission for the club to use a certain portion of the town hall for the projected circulating library. Mrs. Eadson also reported that donations of books had been promised, and reiterated her opinion that an annual fee plus a small exchange fee would be necessary to keep the library a successful concern.

Mrs. J. T. Wright, chairman of the newly appointed legislative committee, gave a most interesting report, demonstrating the fact that her committee had put a great deal of energy into their researches, and survey of local conditions. Mrs. Wright reported that copies of the state constitution were to be obtained at a nominal cost from the state library, and that the Georgia election laws would also be available as soon as they come from the press. Six of those present agreed to meet with the committee for an intensive study of these documents when received. Mrs. Wright conducted a short quiz on the offices of the town, county and state; the personnel, how appointed or elected, how paid, and so on; stating at the same time that this survey had been made so that something might be learned of the management of our own section. Clippings of current events were read in this connection by Mrs. J. B. Bynum, Mrs. R. R. Hatcher, Mrs. Sara Bell Fox, Mrs. Augustus Davisson, Mrs. J. B. Wall, Mrs. Hugh S. Paschal. Mrs. Wright asked that at the next meeting roll call might be answered with clippings from the daily press on current events. Mrs. Wright asked that a sum be set aside to purchase such literature as necessary.

Mrs. Clary read a card from Mrs. J. K. Ottley, calling attention to the birthday celebration of Tallulah Falls. It was decided that at the next meeting a voluntary offering should be made to be sent to the school as a birthday gift.

As Mrs. Dunaway, the chairman of the program committee, had been prevented from preparing a program for the afternoon, in her absence an impromptu program was arranged by Mrs. Fox, Mrs. Clary and Miss Ruth Brown. Master Hugh Paschal, Jr., gave an amusing small boy reading. Miss Margaret Phillips, accompanied by Mrs. Hubert Baughn, sang "A Basket of Roses," and "I Dunno." The cream of the program was the picture gallery. Each member had been asked to bring photographs of herself and of members of her family in childhood. Each one present was expected to list all that were recognized. Pictures of mothers were recognized by the likeness of the daughters. One picture of a "dear little boy" was not recognized by any one until the wife of the original declared the identity.

Mrs. Irby and the Misses Brown served refreshments.

Biennial and Club Institute Discussed By Mrs. J. E. Hays

BY MRS. J. E. HAYS.

The general federation convention at Atlantic City and the club institute at Athens certainly gave to the women of Georgia a university course in the art of being club women. The Georgia women attending both have certainly a broader vision of club work and a deeper sense of the ethics of the business.

The general convention at Atlantic City was a most enjoyable one, as well as a most instructive one. Convening on the steel pier, perched upon the tall pillars out in the ocean, the club women, 5,500 registered delegates and as many visitors, "found themselves" far from the maddening crowds' ignoble strife" and with no noises to disturb them except when at high tide the waves pounded upon the pillars, or when alluring auctions and the luxurious boardwalk chairs called them.

The time, two hours ahead of ours, made us early birds; the meetings opened at 8:45—our 6:45—and we were in convention all day except 1 1-2 hours at noon, and during that time the executive committee met. From 4 until 8 there were teas and dinners at the marvelous hotels. On one afternoon alone your recording secretary attended two teas and three dinners. The evening sessions, opening at 8 o'clock, found us meeting with the sun still shining. One night Will Hays complimented the convention by sending the "Big Parade" with full orchestra. As the program was full, it was given from 12 to 2 a. m., and the theater was full of delegates. Mrs. Sherman made a splendid presiding officer, being fair and impartial as well as gracious at all times.

Biggest Discussion.

The biggest discussion of the convention was on the reindorsement of the child labor amendment. The Kentucky insurgents kept a lively fight up on all occasions, as they came opposed to the majority rule. In spite of the fact that most of the votes from the south were in opposition to the reindorsement, the resolution was passed by a great majority. Whenever the Volstead act was referred to there was unanimous applause, which resulted in a unanimous reindorsement. The office of corresponding secretary was abolished; an office of assistant treasurer was created, and the executive committee was given the power to appoint chairmen of departments, divisions and committees, all of which tended toward centralization of power.

The president of Georgia federation, Mrs. Brantley, made a fine impression on presidents' evening, when she gave her splendid speech with stately dignity. The director, Mrs. Richardson, was always in her place on the stage, and watched after Georgia's interest with keen perception.

Mrs. Inman, the chairman of fine arts, presided on fine arts evening and she not only represented Georgia well and did credit to the works of the fine arts department but seemed a living example of the culture produced by the cultivation of the artistic in music, art and literature. The speech by Mrs. L. A. Miller, of Colorado, was a gem of literature and I hope all Georgia clubwomen may hear her some day.

Juniors Play Part.

The juniors were conspicuous at the convention and put on a colorful pageant in the little theater. The foreign women added much to the meetings and running through the whole convention was a thread of international relations which come out in unusual, wonderful speeches Mrs. Winter, as usual, led the idea in international relations and Dame Rachel Crowder, secretariat of the League of Nations, said by Mrs. Spoonmaker to be the most distinguished woman in the world, stirred the hearts of the women on the subject of peace. The real theme of the year's work, "The American Home," was hardly touched until the last evening, but as always, it commanded first place in the hearts of the women.

Club Institute.

It was a very great joy to go straight from that convention, where there were really only a few Georgia women, to Athens to the club institute and find over 100 Georgia clubwomen, to Athens to the club institute most interested and interesting women in America, there to take a course in club work. We were most fortunate in having Mrs. Fleming, of Ohio, to conduct the institute. I'm sure even Mrs. Nelover, the national chairman of the club institute, could not have given better training. Georgia clubwomen will always love Mrs. Fleming and appreciate her coming and the splendid work she did for us at this institute. Her first question was? "How did you get your university to do this?" So Georgia leads—as always.

It was with a little pain around my heart that I left Atlantic City, as I had served my last session as recording secretary with this distinguished body, but it was with a feeling of gratitude to Georgia clubwomen for having given me the privilege of knowing the work of the general federation and becoming acquainted with the broad ideals of its great women.

Woman's Club of Covington Holds Interesting Meeting

Tuesday afternoon, July 6, the Woman's club, of Covington, held its regular monthly meeting at the library, with Mrs. C. A. Sockwell, vice president, in the chair. The secretary being absent, Mrs. J. E. Hutching was called on to act in her place. The treasurer reported a balance of $149.46 in the treasury.

Mrs. O. W. Porter, chairman of civic committee, reported that shrubbery needed work and water, and after a discussion about the care of shrubbery at Spring park, it was moved and carried that the club pay Mrs. Porter's bill for same.

Mrs. C. A. Sockwell, librarian, has cared, for flowers and shrubbery around library, for which she was given a rising vote of thanks. The library committee reported 75 books had been received from the library commission and 25 new books ordered for library. Mrs. C. A. Sockwell, chairman; Mrs. W. C. Clark and Mrs. Luke Robinson, committee, reported that the room needed to be renovated throughout, walls murescoed, new shades hung and a number of other improvements made. It was moved and carried that this work be done at once, the city donating $25 toward this special work. Communications were read from Mrs. J. K. Ottley in reference to birthday gifts to Tallulah Falls school, and it was moved and carried that the August meeting be given over to this work.

Mrs. Ernest E. Callaway read the rules for entering articles in the county fair this fall, chairman from each circle to decide what article to make. Mrs. Lester Lee, who has been making her home in Florida the past year, has returned to Covington and was reinstated in the club at this meeting. She was given a most cordial welcome.

At the close of the business session the meeting was turned over to the entertainment committee, who presented the following numbers: Piano duet, Misses Eleanor and Dorothy Piper; violin solo, Miss Myrtle Estes, accompanied by her sister, Miss Evelyn Estes.

Refreshments were served by Mrs. Sam Dietz, chairman; Mrs. P. T. Austin, Mrs. L. Mendel, Mrs. J. O. Cooper and Mrs. Ben Brooks, entertainment committee.

Ninth District President Sends Clubwomen Message

To federated clubwomen of the ninth district I am sending you happy greeting. Thanking each one of you whose confidence in my ability to make you a good district president, you gave unto my keeping this honor. To merit such distinction I will faithfully serve, performing my duty cheerfully and unselfishly for only by so doing can I expect active cooperation from the highest officer to the most timid club member. My district I assure you cannot nor will not be a one-woman's district. I am eager to receive suggestions or ideas for club improvement. Already seven club members have advanced new features in their respective lines of club work which is obliged to be of material aid; also constructive advantage in making the ninth district one of the finest and most progressive districts in the state, for we have the clubwomen with every attribute necessary to make it that kind of a district. Let us keep abreast with every department sponsored by our state federation, for only by holding up your state federation can you make your district great and progressive.

Remember that our district holds within its border the greatest asset of our state federation. "The Heart of our Federation," Tallulah Falls school. This honor we deeply appreciate and it cannot be taken from us. Dear ninth district clubwomen, let us work together, dwell together in unity of purpose, determined to make this a banner year as well as a banner district.

Sincerely,
MRS. J. E. M'ELROY.
Ninth District President.

Locust Grove Year Book Is Received.

State headquarters has received the Locust Grove Woman's club year book for 1926-27. The book is beautifully done in green and white, the club colors. The programs are practical and suitable and show thought and care in preparation. "Georgia Land," the state song is on the second page, the Collect on the first.

This wide awake club is not disbanding for the summer and has the following interesting meetings for the summer months: June, barbecue for benefit of club house; July, study of Indians, history past and present and a pageant; August, games and contests; September, education. This great subject is to be handled in a practical way the topics being, "How a Parent May Help a Teacher," "How a Teacher May Help a Parent," open discussion, "Parent's School Problems."

The other months are equally interesting and are well balanced, the federation activities and one month given over to a party for the club husbands. The officers are Mrs. J. C. Arnall, president; Mrs. A. C. Castellaw, vice president; Mrs. H. F. Price, secretary; Miss Clifford Williams, treasurer; Mrs. Claude Gray, parliamentarian. There are 52 members.

Georgia In The Lead.

The child labor cause has won a victory. After the defeat of an attempt to amend the constitution so as to compel the southern states to cease exploiting their child life, it was thought that the south intended to cling to child labor as long as it put profits in the pockets of its producers. Now Georgia has voluntarily passed a child labor law as drastic as those in the north. No child under 14 years can be employed. No child under 16 can work in any place or occupation declared unsafe by the board of health. Children under 18 who wish to go to work must have school and health certificates.

If Georgia's example is followed by other southern states, child labor will be wiped out, and the reform which every intelligent American has long anticipated and desired effected.—California Federation News, June, 1926.

Kill Kare Club Is Entertained.

A delightful affair of Tuesday was the party given by Mrs. J. W. Farley, entertaining the Kill Kare club. A patriotic color scheme was carried out in two interesting contests. Prizes were awarded to Mrs. Aldridge and Mrs. Giles, while the consolations went to Mrs. Lee and Mrs. Atherton.

During the afternoon a surprise handkerchief shower was given Mrs. Giles and Mrs. Almond in honor of their birthdays, these gifts being presented in two huge paper firecrackers.

The children of the mothers were also invited, and they enjoyed games and refreshments on the lawn. An auto sight-seeing trip was another feature of the afternoon.

Those present were Mrs. Almond, Mrs. Aldridge, Mrs. Biggs, Mrs. Atherton, Mrs. Giles, Mrs. Spratling, Mrs. Rayfield, Mrs. Lee, of Memphis, Tenn.; Mrs. Stanley, Mrs. Bracewell and Mrs. Farley.

Mrs. Smith Eulogizes Mrs. James Jackson.

The passing away of Mrs. James Jackson, of New York city, formerly of Atlanta, threw a sadness among the clubwomen, not only of Atlanta, but of Georgia, she being past president of Atlanta Woman's club and past president of the Georgia Federation of Woman's Clubs.

A noble citizen, faithful worker in church and club activities; loyalty and sincerity were her watchwords in life.

She was good in her greatness and great in her goodness. Well done, thou good and faithful servant—enter into the haven of rest.

MRS. W. B. PRICE-SMITH.
President Atlanta Woman's Club.

Miss Woodberry Pays Mrs. Jackson Tribute.

Mrs. James Jackson, as president of the Georgia Federation of Women's clubs, left her impress upon its ideals and organization, through her strong personality and intellectual leadership. In those formative days of club life, her contribution was of lasting benefit, laying foundations that have made possible the great achievements of today. She kept in close touch with its onward march of service and influence and expressed especial gratification that her plan of district organization had proven so structurally vital in the growth of the federation, as it has been so wonderfully developed.

Mrs. Jackson's life and work were so wholly consecrated, that in it all there shone through her service the Master's spirit and guidance, and all she did was a labor of love and joy.

The Church And Its Support.

As human beings we are all prone to evade that which is not pleasant. But sometimes the truth and constructive criticisms help us far more than flattery, even as dulcet as this is, to most ears. Because we do not look things in the face many things happen in our religious lives and that of the church we love that might have been avoided. How many of us have heard people say that every time they go to church all they hear is money. Perhaps they, too, with the man in the old joke might say, they didn't know what was done with it, because they had never given any. Because this would be the correct statement of facts. All churches, I presume have their quota of members, who either do not give at all, or an amount of which they would be ashamed, if it became known. Probably if their gifts were given publicity, they might enlarge themselves on general principles. Just how do these non-givers honestly justify themselves?

There is no lodge, or club, or society of any kind that does not have dues, which are to be paid. When this is not done, they are blackballed either publicly or privately and their names removed from the books of the institution. Nothing in this world can be run without money. It takes money the run the King's business also. When we enter the business world we have ways and means to make a steady income, but we have to put money into any scheme in order that it will produce of its kind. No business house could make expenses if it were maintained on the free-will offering basis. There are all sorts of overhead expenses to be met and the firm must know how much they need to take in before these can be met and a margin remain. In our churches, lights and janitors and choirs and ministers and other staff workers, if any, must be allowed for. And there is no other way to get it than to depend on the generosity of the church members who profess to love the Lord and to worship Him with their gifts and presence. As the old squib has it, a quarter is not enough to buy many things, even a moving picture ticket, yet what vast proportions it assumes when it journeys to church on Sundays!

It is not that folks haven't it either, for the poor, hard-working members of the church give far more liberally in proportion to their incomes than those who ride up in style with chauffeurs and limousines and wear the finest and handsomest of clothes. They could get money for all these fripperies, why not for the Lord who gave them ALL they have? Health, strength, friends, personality, the ability to make what they have accumulated and who says that He loves a cheerful giver! And there are many other things said about giving and what is expected of His followers.

It would not be necessary to give suppers, rummage sales and the various entertainments that churches have to have if all the members thereof gave in proportion to what they spend for other things. Everyone cannot tithe, although those who do are always richer and more successful than those who do not, but the poorest and the lowliest can give something, and it will be blessed as the widow's mite of old, because she gave all she had quietly and humbly and not with show and acclaim like the rich man who wished his bounty to be well advertised.

All churches have members who do not come, do not give, will not work and, in fact, are members only in name. Yet if death, or trouble, or sickness enters in, and the church in a body does not rush to their aid and consolation as the afflicted party thinks they should, you would think them badly abused. Those who expect the most attention are invariably the ones who never themselves offer comfort and consolation or take any cognizance of distress and need of any kind. Those who complain the most bitterly about being begged continually for money are not the ones who give until it hurts and are glad they can and who would do more if they could. Are you a drone and a shirker, or are you helpful and useful and generous in the work of the Master's vineyard? In your heart you know, and it was indeed a wiseacre of the first water who once remarked, "Better late than never." For we need not continue to pursue a path we know to be the wrong one, and truly while we have breath, it never IS too late to turn over a new leaf as white as snow in its pristine freshness, and begin thereon a new record of which we shall be proud, so it shall sometime be said of us, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter into the joys of thy Lord."

—JESSIE HALEY KERKSIS.

Who would call this a day off?

Mighty lot of trouble and worry, isn't it, to have the washing done at home? Washwoman cluttering up the place, extra lunches, picking up—no wonder you feel like sighing "Never Again!"

Unnecessary trouble, too, when it's so much easier, so much better, and more economical in the long run, to take advantage of the laundry's careful and experienced family wash service and send all your clothes to the laundry.

Briefly Told

Miss Floy Ray of the Haygood Memorial Methodist church, has been elected treasurer of the board of the Atlanta Goodwill industry. Miss Ray is treasurer of her church and superintendent of the junior department of the Sunday school.

Mrs. Buford Boykin, of Carrollton, is representing the North Georgia Conference Woman's Missionary society at the social service conference of the M. E. church, south, which closes today at Lake Junaluska, N. C.

Mrs. A. L. Norris, Deaconess Bessie Allen and Mrs. Wallace Rogers are at the Mission building, Lake Junaluska, N. C., for the city mission conference. They represent the Methodist mission board of Atlanta. Mrs. J. N. McEachern is representing the North Georgia Conference Woman's Missionary society at the same conference.

Miss Frances Howard, who lived in Atlanta for several years as deaconess with the Atlanta Methodist mission board, passed through Atlanta last week en route to her new appointment at Bethlehem House, Augusta. She was the guest of Mrs. H. W. Grant for several days.

Miss Anne McDonald, head resident of the Martha O'Byan House, of Nashville, Tenn., was the guest of Deaconess Bessie Allen here last week. Miss McDonald is a city missionary under the Presbyterian board and was en route to her home in New Jersey for a vacation.

The Smithville Missionary society was the first auxiliary in the South Georgia conference to meet the quota in the Bennett Memorial campaign for the Methodist Training school in Nashville, Tenn. Cusseta, in the Columbus district, and Valdosta have paid in full but are making every effort to make a plus gift to the cause.

Mrs. Homer Wright, formerly of Decatur but now of Birmingham, Ala., is the guest of her sister, Mrs. Joseph L. Dennis. She led the devotional at the July city mission board meeting of Methodist women and was cordially welcomed by the friends who knew her when she served so faithfully as president of the Missionary society of Decatur First church for several years.

The Inman Park Methodist women hold the highest attendance record in the monthly meetings of the Methodist city mission board. For several months, they have held the lead. There were 10 representatives from their auxiliary at the July board meeting in Wesley Memorial church on last Tuesday.

Good news has come from the Baptist Y. W. A. and G. A. house party at Bessie Tift college, Forsyth, June 31-July 9. The registration included about 75 young people and leaders in various departments of W. M. U. work.

Mrs. A. F. McMahon, corresponding secretary-treasurer, and Miss Julia Allen, young people's leader (State B. W. M. U.) returned to Atlanta Saturday after having spent 10 days at Bessie Tift college with the young folks gathered there.

No feature of the Bessie Tift house party was more delightful than the series of talks given last week-end by Miss Kathleen Mallory, Birmingham, Ala., corresponding secretary of the south-wide Baptist W. M. U.

Misses Mildred and Grace Garner, daughters of Rev. and Mrs. G. W. Garner, 964 Highland avenue, spent ten "glorious" days at the Ridgecrest, N. C. Baptist encampment where charming girls from all over the southland gathered the latter part of June. Miss Mildred Garner has written an interesting story of the missionary substantials and the many sports which the young folks enjoyed at Ridgecrest.

Dr. and Mrs. T. W. Ayers, returned missionaries from Hwaughsien, China, are at home with their daughter, Mrs. Lucy Ayers Pitman at St. Charles place. Mrs. Pitman complimented her parents on last Thursday evening with a reception at which many friends of the prominent Ayers family enjoyed unusually cordial fellowship.

The Pollard Mission Study class of the Ponce de Leon Baptist W. M. S. met on last Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. R. D. Webb, 111 East North avenue, and completed the study of Stanley High's popular book, "Looking Ahead With Latin America."

Mrs. T. L. Lewis, honorary president of the Federated Church Women, who has been for the past two months on a visit to Los Angeles, Calif., is expected home in time to attend the quarterly meeting of the Federated Church Women on Wednesday, July 21st.

About 50 volumes were given recently to the Nurses' library at Grady hospital, by members of the Woman's auxiliary, St. Luke's Episcopal church. These books hold much of interest for the nurses in their times of relaxation.

Changes Made In Mission Work.

Since the recent meeting of the general conference of the M. E. church, south, interesting changes are being made in the work of the mission fields and the board of missions, in accordance with the action of the conference.

For the first time in the history of the church the president of the Woman's Missionary conference is to be a member of the conference board of missions, ex-officio. (Paragraph 13 of the new constitution.) Mrs. W. B. Higginbothem, as president of the North Georgia conference, will be in the annual meeting of the board in November under this new ruling.

Work among the Orientals on the Pacific coast which has been going on for some years was organized and will, in future, be known as the California Oriental mission.

The Czecho-Slovakian mission was raised to the position of an annual conference. This gives that group the privilege of having representation in the next general conference.

The Siberian mission was divided into two missions: (1) the Siberian, including work for Koreans in Siberia and Manchuria, and (2) Russian work, including the work for Russians in Siberia.

Griffin District Secretary

MRS. W. Y. DANIEL, OF THOMASVILLE.

Mrs. W. Y. Daniel, of Thomaston, is the secretary of the Griffin district Woman's Missionary society of the M. E. church. She presided over the recent district meeting held in Hampton.

The district made a financial increase of $108.55 the first quarter of this year. Four of the auxiliaries have paid in full their quota to the Bennett Memorial fund, Thomaston, McDonough, Griffin and Forsyth.

Miss Leah Hartley who is preparing for the work of a missionary and is now a student of Scarritt college in Nashville, Tennessee, is a product of the district.

Mrs. Daniel is held in high esteem by the women of her district and is making a splendid leader in the work of the missionary societies.

She was a member of the recent conference of Ministers and Laymen and has been elected to represent them in the annual conference to meet in Atlanta in November.

God's Dollar

The editor of this page has cheerfully given me space to tell the Baptist women of the Atlanta Missionary union of my appreciation of the honer given me as the successor of Mrs. C. W. King and the noble women who have preceded her.

In taking this active leadership, I confess that I know of no other way for a really great service to be rendered than by the giving of self. To the heroism of a great Christian sacrifice I would call the Baptist women of the Atlanta association. We must not surrender the great altruistic stride made in past years.

It is our duty to add something to the world's spiritual assets. "For their sakes, I sanctify myself," speaks our Lord. With this spirit no woman will chafe under insistent requests for money to further the kingdom's program. We will rather give welcome to every possible expenditure of ourselves and of our ability in the way of true service.

I am not senseless of the splendid service many of the women of our churches are rendering. I am only lashed of soul by the fact of those who do not respond. We ought to lay down our lives. We ought to give urselves at this time to the carrying on of the allotted tasks set by our denomination.

Oh, that we might free the churches of the Atlanta association of their financial obligations. Pledges have been made, and built on confidence the boards have enlarged the fields of endeavor. Today, I have faith to believe that if God's people would only practice Christian stewardship, every avenue of activity would be cared for with the ease and delight attendant upon duty to God.

Let me urge the women of our association to bestir themselves, to make good every promise and for the honor of their church and the glory of God come to the associational meeting with a record of achievement comparable, yea, beyond that of former years.

Let us recognize God's ownership of all things and be stewards of our possessions.

MRS. WILBUR M. JONES.
Supt., Atlanta B. W. M. U.

Mrs. Lewis Writes From Los Angeles.

Sunday brought a peaceful rest that made one long for home and church. The only nearby house of worship was the Westlake Presbyterian.

The thought came as we neared the quaint church we will not be questioned should we reach the pearly gates, "What route did you come?" But a voice will be heard saying, "Welcome home my child."

Rev. George A. Hartman, pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Elcentro, was preaching for the pastor while on his vacation. His subject, "Conservation of Supernatural Forces," was impressive. He brought home the urgent need of protecting the material forces of our great country.

The women of this church have many centers of activity. Their daily vocation Bible school opened Monday, in which both parents and teachers are greatly interested. A splendid new Methodist church in the far downtown section said to have cost a million with its splendid choir will be the next objective. The young men of the church seem to be very interested in foreign missions. Japan and Korea were the subjects for discussion Sunday night. These countries are not so far away from the western world. The Japanese is a responsibility. The Mexican and Indian are all here—a subject for serious thought for the preacher as well as the statesman.

Stereopticon Views Of Goodwill Industry.

G. E. Holly, head of the goodwill department of the board of missions of the M. E. church, south, is in the city and in charge of the Atlanta Goodwill industry for the summer months until the new superintendent comes.

Mr. Holly has a series of stereopticon slides which demonstrate what is possible for a good will center to do and what is actually being done in many other cities. He will be very glad to come before any church group of any denomination and show these pictures at any time during his stay here. Call him at the Goodwill industry, Main 1220, in the day time, or at the Y. M. C. A. at night.

Miss Angy Taylor Now on Way Home.

By the time this information reaches her friends Miss Angy Manning Taylor will be making her homeward voyage.

Her work in the Union Bible school of Nanking, China, where she devoted the past ten months to teacher training and which work has been greatly blessed of God, was concluded during the latter part of June.

A shower of post cards to greet Miss Taylor on her return would be a pleasant evidence of the affection in which she is held by those who attended her classes here in Atlanta.

For any who may wish to send a word of greeting, her address is 5496 Hyde Park Boulevard, Chicago, Ill.

Atlanta Methodist Holds Wonderful Attendance Record

Mrs. M. E. Tilly, of Atlanta, conference superintendent of children's work in the North Georgia Conference Woman's Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South, has a record that probably no other church worker in the church has in that she has attended 111 annual district meetings in various parts of the state.

Each of the 12 districts making up the conference holds a meeting once a year—usually in the late spring and early summer—each following closely upon the other, with, sometimes, three in one week. Distance, train schedules, weather and health do not enter Mrs. Tilly's mind when "district meeting time" comes. She has been superintendent of the children's work for nine years. Before she took office, she attended four to represent Mrs. J. P. Womble, who was, at that time, in office but could not attend. About two years ago, at the Marietta district meeting, Mrs. Tilly was too ill to go to the chapel where the meeting was but she fell ill after arriving for the conference so that made the attendance record perfect until the past week. Her absence in the Chipley meeting was caused by the fact that that date had to be changed from the time originally set and Mrs. Tilly had promised to teach in the school of missions at Blue Ridge, N. C.

Mrs. Albright Elected To Annual Conference.

There were only three churches in the North Atlanta district that did not elect one woman, or more, to membership in the conference held in Decatur First church during the past week. In spite of the fact that these three had no women in their representation, there were more women in the body than ever before since the privilege has been granted them.

Those elected were as follows: From Bethany and Maysons, Mrs. L. L. Brown and Miss Lillian Brown; Center Street, Mrs. J. F. Mays and Mrs. H. S. Hutchinson; Collins Memorial, Mrs. Virlyn Moore, Mrs. J. B. Summerlin and Miss Idella Bellah; Druid Hills, Mrs. W. A. Albright, Mrs. A. L. Norris; English Avenue and Jefferson Street, Mrs. D. S. Shelton; Epworth, Mrs. J. G. Foote, Mrs. J. H. Whitaker; First church, Mrs. Ella G. Carter, Mrs. F. B. Thomas, Mrs. J. C. Staton, Mrs. John Daniel, Mrs. W. H. Rawson; Grace, Mrs. C. R. Fox, Mrs. Mary Harrison; Inman Park, Miss Evelyn Nixon, Mrs. S. J. Warner, Mrs. J. B. Fincher, Mrs. Henry Ittner; Mt. Vernon, Mrs. Thomas Moore; Payne Memorial, Mrs. George Sims, Mrs. W. F. Griffin; Peachtree Road, Mrs. M. T. Salter; St. James, Mrs. C. V. Weathers; St. Mark, Mrs. J. N. McEachern, Mrs. Warner Hill, Mrs. J. B. Hemming, Mrs. J. W. Austin, Mrs. J. W. Hurt, Mrs. J. E. Robinson; Underwood Memorial, Mrs. S. M. Gilleland and Mrs. A. G. Cason; Wesley Memorial, Mrs. Marvin Williams, Mrs. H. L. Simmons; Brookhaven, Mrs. P. B. Andes; Decatur First church, Mrs. J. A. McCrary, Mrs. H. H. Trotti; Patillo Memorial, Mrs. K. P. McClung, Mrs. C. J. Johnson, Mrs. F. E. Garland; Dunwoody, Mrs. W. Y. Womack; Ingleside, Mrs. F. B. Gorham, Miss Alice Jackson; Lawrenceville, Miss Minnie Peeples; Logansville, Mrs. Mamie Oliver; Redan, Miss Flora Gresham; Norcross and Prospect, Mrs. C. D. Jones, Mrs. W. O. McKibbem, Mrs. W. W. Mendenhall, Miss Lola Key, Mrs. L. D. Ewing; Norcross church, Miss Lena Martin.

Mrs. W. A. Albright was the only woman member elected as delegate to the annual conference which meets in Atlanta in November.

Methodist Young People Send Dolls to Japan.

The young people's superintendents of the Methodist churches in the North Atlanta district met at luncheon on Thursday in the home of Mrs. Marvin Thurman on Emory drive. Those present were Mrs. Wild, of Payne Memorial; Mrs. Wilson, of Collins Memorial; Miss Johnston, of Decatur; Mrs. McClung, of Patillo Memorial; Miss Olive Mays, of Inman Park, and Mrs. Thurman, of Druid Hills. An out-of-town guest was Mrs. Walter Bramlett, president of the society at Forsyth.

The hostess, who is the key woman for the district, conducted the round-table discussion which followed the luncheon. Many things pertaining to the work of the young people were considered, among them being: Literature, how to care for the younger girls when first promoted from the junior society, best methods of giving the programs, finances, an increase in spirituality and how to bring it about.

A letter was read from Mrs. W. C. Thompson, conference superintendent of young people, who suggested that the two Atlanta districts unite in a joint council meeting at an early date. This will be done probably in September.

In answer to an appeal from Miss Lois Maddux, north Georgia's young people's representative in the foreign field, these societies pledged, through the delegates attending this meeting, to dress dolls in the fashion of a five-year-old American child and send them to Japan for Miss Maddux to use in her school work there.

Third Y. W. A. Camp At Ridgecrest.

Now that the third Y. W. A. camp is over, we can not help wondering if the stars are shining as brightly at Ridgecrest as they did during the 10 days that we were there. It was wonderful to be up in the mountains where the air was cool and full of life, and to be with a crowd of enthusiastic girls from every state in the southland. Georgia was represented by 14 girls under the leadership of Miss Julia Allen, of Atlanta.

Every morning there we woke to the tune of reveille and rushed down to breakfast and to try our early morning "pep" against all comers. Never has there been a gayer assembly—so early—in the morning! There were songs and yells for the girls, for the leaders and the camp. Just after breakfast we had our morning devotional, which was conducted by the state leaders. Following this was open forum, a delightful hour when methods and plans of work were discussed and helpful suggestions made. The next period was for study courses on our missionary work in China, Argentina and Cuba. And the last hour before dinner was devoted to inspiring Bible talks by Dr. Carver and Dr. Ray.

During the afternoons we hiked the nearby mountains, learned the fine art of telling stories or tried to get around to the score of things there always were to do before twilight. Just after supper came one of the most beautiful hours of the day—vespers by the lake in the woods with lovely Mrs. Cox helping each girl to set her feet on a "star trail," or leading her back to long-forgotten dreams and ambitions.

Then we had the opportunity of hearing the daughters of some of our missionaries tell about their work in foreign countries, so we were able to get in very close touch with them. And the last hour before "lights out" was talent hour, when each of us had the chance, sooner or later, of shining forth for our state and covering ourselves with glory. There was fun and pep in abundance, and not a sad heart in the camp when the time came to say good-night.

Each day was filled to overflowing with new ideas, new discoveries and new friendships. Many of us met for the first time Mrs. Cox, Mrs. Juliette Mather, Miss Mallory, Miss Leachman, Mrs. Lawrence and other of our leaders whom we have always loved and admired from a distance. The days seemed to fly by too swiftly and the time to return was all too soon. But even in the little while we were there each of us came to feel the real spirit of Ridgecrest, and every girl could return to her home with new courage and a desire in her heart to serve her Master more faithfully.

Study Class at West End Baptist.

A delightful mission study class was held on Tuesday, July 6, at the West End Baptist church with about fifty present. Stanley High's interesting book, "Looking Ahead With Latin America," was taught by Mrs. W. Harvey Clarke. Of those present there were forty-one who took the examination. A pleasant feature of the occasion was that the junior organizations of the W. M. S. were invited to meet with the ladies for this study. How beautiful it is to see mothers and daughters and even some of the sons, R. A. boys, all united in a study of conditions and needs of our mission fields.

LaGrange District Society Meets.

The Woman's Missionary society of the LaGrange district held its annual meeting last week in the Methodist church at Chipley with Mrs. R. A. Field, of Newnan, presiding. Mrs. Field is the new district secretary, having succeeded Mrs. Albert Hill, of Greenville, who resigned in February.

The LaGrange district is proud of the fact that more conference officers in the North Georgia Conference Woman's Missionary society live within its bounds than in any other of the 12 districts in the conference. They are: Mrs. W. B. Higginbothem, of West Point, president; Mrs. R. J. Atkinson, of Greenville, vice president, and Mrs. T. E. Atkinson, of Newnan, who is superintendent of mission and Bible study. All three of these prominent women were in attendance at this recent meeting. Other outstanding visitors who were on the program were Mrs. B. B. Brown, of Griffin; Mrs. B. F. Boykin, of Carrollton; Rev. and Mrs. Wynton Jenkins, of Manchuria; Miss Ella Leveritt, of China.

The Chipley auxiliary, under the direction of Mrs. Durand Miller and Mrs. Wiley Wisdom, presented a pageant, "The Spirit of Scarritt," which was beautifully given in the interest of the Bennett memorial fund.

The conference went on record unanimously as being opposed to any modifications of the Volstead act. This followed an address on "Law Enforcement" by Mrs. B. F. Boykin, conference superintendent of social service.

Miss Bert Winter, who has returned from Scarritt college and is employed by the North Georgia conference in organizing rural societies, was a visitor who meant a great deal to the success of the conference.

The invitation to meet in Greenville in 1927 was accepted enthusiastically.

Value of Newspapers.

In the Adult Student, the quarterly being used in the Sunday schools of the M. E. church, south, in the July number there appears this splendid paragraph from the editor:

"It is appropriate that serious-minded folk should be appreciating in these days the value of our newspapers. The assertion is made that ours is a day of newspapers and ours is an age of newspaper readers. These purveyers of news are reaching the poor man, the men of different races, the peoples of all nations, and even our children. They are creating public sentiment and turning the course of progress of thought currents and group feelings.

"Evidences are appearing that there is coming into strength a sense of duty among our newspapers. They are debating the best way of handling crime news. They are isolating the yellow journals. They are, in many cases, keeping their editorial expressions on a high plane. That marked defects and vicious tendencies can be pointed out is certain. We merely raise the question whether our churches in their broader outlook would not do well to list newspapers in that powerful group of indirect agencies of education upon which the hand of religion should rest."

Covington Host To District Board.

A very delightful meeting of the executive board of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Stone Mountain association was held at the home of Mrs. J. E. Hutchins, on Floyd street, Friday morning at 10 o'clock.

The home was made attractive with bowls of sweet peas and other garden flowers. Mrs. E. G. Walton, president, presided, and the meeting was opened with song, followed by the devotional led by Mrs. A. S. Hopkins.

The reports of the district treasurer and the delegates showed encouraging growth in all lines, and many interesting things were brought out in the reports of the officers. It was voted to keep a scrapbook of the board's work.

Plans were made and committee appointed for the annual meeting to be held at Lithonia, Ga., in August. After the business session, a delicious luncheon was served, covers being placed for 20 guests. Those assisting Mrs. Hutchins were Mrs. H. B. Rogers, Mrs. J. C. Upshaw, Mrs. C. C. King, Mrs. W. F. Williams, Miss Hetcher Lou Lunsford, and Miss Sara Clyde Hutchins.

After luncheon all attended the fourth district rally, which was held at the Baptist church. This rally was presided over by Mrs. J. C. Upshaw, district secretary.

The program was as follows:

Prayer by Rev. Walker Combs.

Reading—"The Little Brown Girl and I"—Rachel Harper.

Reading—"The Highwayman"—Miss Ora Upshaw.

Solo—"In the Garden"—Miss Sara Clyde Hutchins.

Reports from officers present.

Address by Mrs. E. G. Walton.

The body voted to hold an associational mission study institute and an invitation was extended by the Covington church to meet there in July.

500 Southern Textile Men Are Expected To Attend Convention Soon at Tybee

Conditions in Industry And Work of Organization To Be Main Features of Meet.

Lancaster, S. C.,—July 10.—(Special.)—Textile men from all over the south will gather at Tybee, Ga., for the annual convention of the Southern Textile association on July 16-17, according to Gordon Cobb, secretary, who is vice president of the Lancaster Cotton mills here. Upwards of 500 operating executives from the Carolinas and Georgia and other southern states are expected to attend.

Conditions in the industry at the present time, and the activities of the organization, make this the most important association meeting in years, declared Mr. Cobb in announcing the official program. The theme of the meeting will be the standardization of textile products and processes, upon which the association, comprising the operating heads of the southern mills, has been working for some time.

The convention will be opened on Friday morning by the president, Oscar D. Grimes, of Athens, Ga. Marshall Dilling, of Gastonia, N. C., will deliver the invocation, and John A. McFalls, of Ranlo, N. C., will respond to the welcome of the mayor on behalf of the visitors.

The chief feature of the session will be an address by Robert F. Bowe, assistant vice president, Hunter Manufacturing & Commission company, of New York, whose subject will be "Delivering the Goods." With extended experience as both manufacturer and selling agent, Mr. Bowe is well qualified to discuss the problem of distribution, according to Mr. Cobb.

J. O. Corn, superintendent Pacific Mills, Columbia, S. C., will make the report of the carding division, of which he is chairman. This will cover the first meeting of the division held for the sole purpose of establishing textile standards. The results of the work done have been compiled by Mr. Corn, who will present his findings to the association for confirmation. All standards confirmed at the Tybee meeting will be entered as tentative standards for a year, following which they will be adopted as association standards.

The report of the spinning committee will be made by Chairman Carl R. Harris, assistant superintendent Inman Mills, Inman, S. C. At the committee's last meeting, an effort was made to set up standards for spinning, but as there were more fine yarn spinners present than the print cloth spinners, Mr. Cobb suggested that a North Carolina section be formed, which would enable the fine yarn and knit goods spinners to set up standards for their conditions. Mr. Harris did, however, make considerable progress toward standards common with all numbers, and will make a report on this, it is stated.

C. M. Black, general superintendent Borden Manufacturing company, Goldsboro, N. C., will report on the fine yarn spinners' meeting held in Goldsboro on May 14, and a report also will be heard from the recently organized Rutherford county, N. C., Textile club, which has affiliated with the Southern Textile association.

The report of Secretary Cobb, embracing the general activities of the association during the past year, will be the next feature, and this will be followed by discussion of new inventions and devices, and other subjects.

Banquet on Friday.

The annual banquet of the association will be held on Friday evening at 7:30 o'clock at the Tybee hotel.

Oscar D. Grimes, of Athens, will deliver the president's address at the Saturday morning session, and this will be followed by the report of L. L. Brown, general superintendent Clifton (S. C.) Manufacturing company, as chairman of the weaving division. Mr. Cobb states that this will be a report of the most important weaving meeting ever held, since a start was made toward standards for tolerances in print cloth goods.

Election of officers for the coming year, and the selection of a meeting place for the next convention will be the concluding feature of the Saturday session which will close the convention.

GIRL WITH LONGEST CURLS TO BE QUEEN OF LAKEWOOD PARK

The Atlanta girl with the longest curls will be crowned queen of the children's day throng at Lakewood park Wednesday afternoon, it was announced Saturday by Oscar Mills, secretary of the Southeastern Fair association. A committee of officers of women's organizations appointed by Mr. Mills will select the girl under 16 years of age whose curls are longest and the fair association will give her free entree into all rides, shows and other attractions at the park for the day.

Subjects of the queen of curls, including all children under 16 years old in Atlanta, will be admitted to all the park amusements at a special Wednesday children's matinee price of 5 cents.

Campaign To Popularize Pink Salmon 'Put Over' by Newspaper Advertising

Seattle, July 10.—The current national advertising campaign for canned pink salmon and the part played therein by The Constitution, form a new and interesting chapter in the book of modern advertising accomplishments, according to D. W. T. Prosser, of the Strang & Prosser Advertising agency in Seattle. Here is an instance of cooperative advertising by an important food producing industry with results following not next month or next year, but immediately, through the use of imposing space in leading newspapers of the United States.

In the Atlanta territory The Constitution was selected exclusively to carry to the consuming public the educational message of the economy and high food value of canned pink salmon. First announcements appeared during the Lenten season, and have been followed each week with new suggestions on the preparation and serving of salmon. Women readers, always keen and alert to learn of new dishes and new ways to serve foods, were instantly responsive.

Thousands of homes not before knowing the delicious flavor and healthful properties of pink salmon are now enjoying it frequently, prepared in scores of varied ways, while during hot weather especially it is favored for sandwiches, salads, or served chilled, just as it comes from the can.

The nation's salmon pack comes from the cold waters of the north Pacific and Alaska—a sea-food industry with an output of $50,000,000 value annually, the largest of the kind in the world. More than half of all this salmon is of the pink variety or grade—rated by the United States bureau of fisheries as highest of all in food value, but less expensive to catch and pack because of relative abundance.

Each year the packers of pink salmon have been facing a surplus of some 600,000 to 1,000,000 cases, yet with a great potential market right here at home awaiting development. Few people have known the important facts about salmon. England has a higher per capita consumption of American salmon that the United States.

Leaders in the pink salmon industry, early this year determined upon an educational campaign and selected some thirty of the largest cities in the country as centers for advertising a full page in The Constitution, featuring salmon dishes and offering $1,000 in prizes for the 50 best recipes received up to August 31.

Widespread interest was immediately engendered in homes, hotels, cafes and luncheon places of Atlanta and all the country, and the grocery and distributing trade was at once "electrified." Sales during Lent were heavy, despite a cold backward season, and they have been advancing steadily since. Instead of the usual recession following Lent, sales curve climbed gradually upward, and throughout the country as a whole sales of pink salmon are from 25 to 40 per cent ahead of the average of recent years. Some reports of large dealers show 100 per cent increase, and more.

While the packers expected that it would take two years of advertising at least to eliminate that annual surplus, it has been virtually wiped out in four months, as a direct result of the consumer appeal, and the new pack of salmon just beginning to come down from Alaska is going right into consumption.

In fact, the difficulty faced by the packers is to bring enough of the new pack down from the north to meet requirements of the summer months up to August 31, always the heaviest consuming season of the year.

Because the very essence of the campaign was speed in getting the message before the American people, and because newspapers go right into the home and provide a daily buyer's guide for the housewife, they were logically chosen to carry the main load of the campaign, much to the satisfaction of dealers and all branches of the trade.

The selection of newspapers has been justified—so much so that the packers have just determined to continue it through the summer in a score or more of the active centers of the country. Atlanta is one of the cities chosen—and The Constitution continues to be the message-bearer.

Offices of the Associated Salmon Packers, in the L. C. Smith building, Seattle, are overflowing with requests for information as to the best ways to serve pink salmon, and with entries in the prize recipe contest. Responses are now approaching 40,000 and any number of women have written in detail the interesting and helpful experiences of themselves and their friends in preparing and serving pink salmon in new ways.

One of the most interesting features of the campaign is a bulletin recently issued by the department of commerce, bureau of fisheries, in which the food value of canned pink salmon is set forth, with stress upon its high content of iodine, so valuable in the treatment of goitre. It also carries 44 tested and approved recipes.

LAKEWOOD CONCERTS BEGIN AT 3:30 O'CLOCK

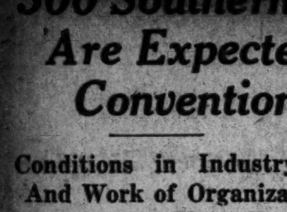

Musical concerts at Lakewood park will begin at 3:30 o'clock Sunday afternoons during the remainder of the park season instead of the earlier hour observed during the first half of the year, it was announced Saturday by Oscar Mills, secretary of the Southeastern Fair association, which sponsors the concerts.

Changing the length of days at this season throws the entire grandstand in the shade by 3:30 o'clock, Mr. Mills said, making the later hour more pleasant for the thousands of regular attendants at the concerts.

The Elks' Royal Purple band, directed by John T. Lee, and Miss Jessie Reese Calvert, soprano, will present this afternoon's concert.

THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION

SUNDAY JULY 11th, 1926

BOBBY'S INSPIRATION—Mrs. Bobby Jones, with her husband, the newly crowned British open champion, aboard the reception boat Macom, which carried the New York welcome committee and the Atlanta delegation to meet Jones when he arrived on the Aquitania. (International)

"HAIL, THE CONQUERING HERO" was the very appropriate piece rendered by the band as Bobby Jones, winner of the British open golf championship, led the parade given in his honor up Broadway. (International)

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"—Rudolph Valentino and Pola Negri are again reported engaged. Mme. Eleanor Chalupe, mother of the actress, has confirmed the report. (International)

SEE IF THIS WORRIES YOU?—Gaze at the likeness of General Joseph Haller, Polish general, who after overthrowing his government resigned his position. (International)

VENUS WOULDN'T HAVE A CHANCE with this Georgia girl, according to Constantine Bodner, famous artist. She is Miss Freddie Estelle Humphries, who won the perfect figure contest in New York from over three thousand girls. (International)

AFTER SEVEN YEARS IN PRISON Ziang Sun Wan, Chinese student, is freed of slaying charge in Washington. He is shown here with his brother, Tsong Ing Wan, who staged the long fight for Ziang's freedom. The charge grew out of the death of three Chinese students. (International)

TO IMPROVE YOUR CHARLESTON! Add this to your daily dozen, according to Miss Betty Gould, dancer, of Cincinnati. (International)

SHIPS THAT PASS IN THE NIGHT—A CHOPPY SWIRL OF WATERS—With low hanging clouds and a lonely sail far down on the horizon—that's Hampton Roads, where the Norfolk water regatta will be held in August.
(Bagby, Virginia State Chamber of Commerce)

IT'S A LONG STORY, MATES; SO LIGHT UP—These octogenarian flappers are good, old-fashioned Belgian "grannies" enjoying the sun and a quiet pipe in a market square.
(Herbert)

(International)

NOPE; CHARLIE ISN'T GOING TO MARRY HER—She's Racquel Meller, Spanish danseuse, and she merely paid a visit to Chaplin while he was filming a new laugh-producer in Hollywood. The two may play in movies together later, it is said, but that wouldn't account for their sad looks.
(International)

CAUGHT AGAIN—"Get-Rich-Quick" Ponzi, financial wizard of Boston, Florida and points north and south, is back in the clutches of the law after staging a disappearing act. He was arrested on a ship bound for Italy and was disguised as a seaman.
(Herbert)

(Herbert)

SNAKE-BITE WITH YOUR LIQUOR—It took a New York Chinaman to think of the unique plan of providing an excuse to drink along with the bottle. Raiders found he was soaking dried snakes in his home brew.
(International)

"CHILDREN OF CHARLES I"—One of the 52 paintings selected as the world's greatest. It was painted by Van Dyck. See today's Constitution Magazine for story.

TWO LITTLE KITTENS WHO LOST THEIR MITTENS—And "granny" gazes down at them with stern disapproval through her glasses and declines to read them their usual bedtime story. Cute, eh what?
(Herbert)

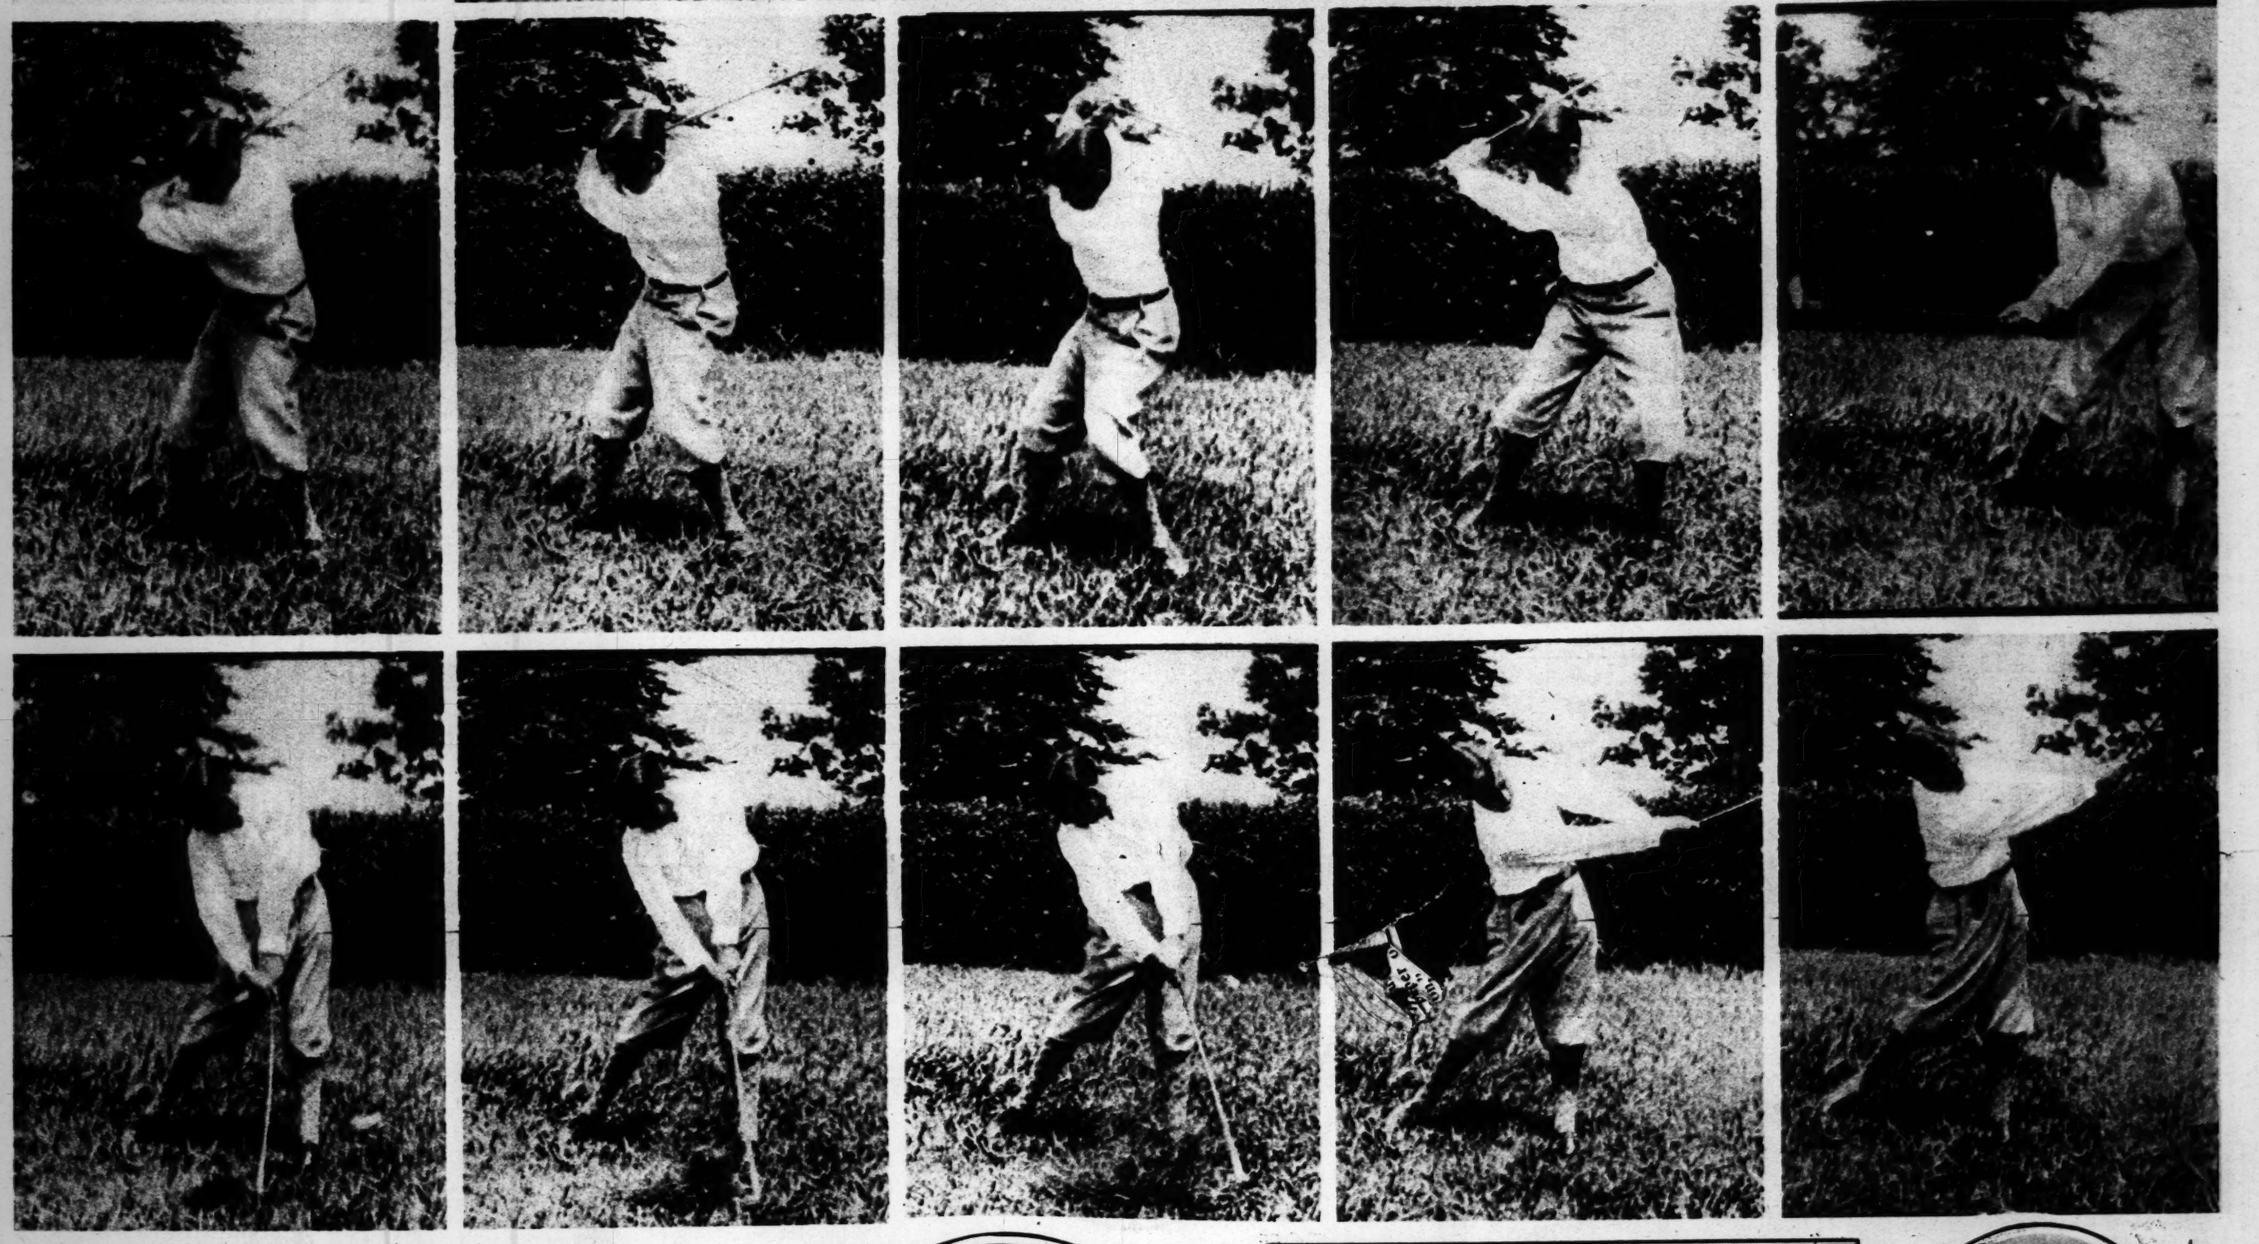

HE DISCOVERED "BABE" RUTH—But Columbus isn't likely to suffer any loss of popularity over the fact. Brother Gilbert, member of the Xavierian Order of Catholic Brothers, is credited with pushing the "king of swat" to his present high financial position.
(Herbert)

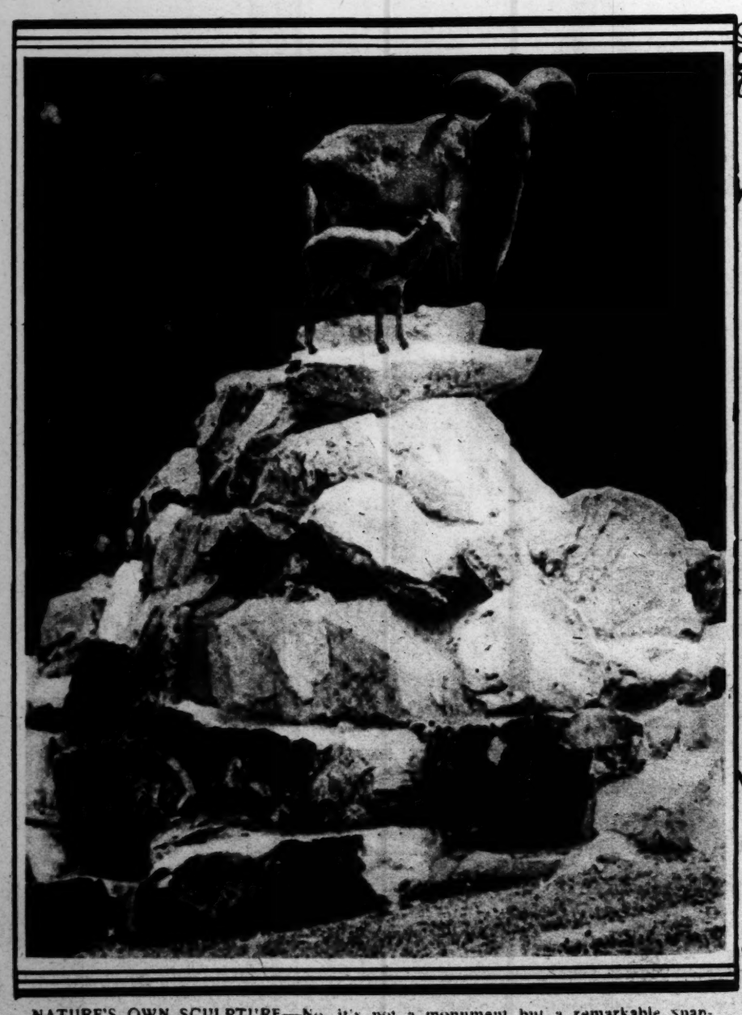

WHERE FIFTEEN MET DEATH—Splintered wreckage of the crash between the Pittsburg-Washington Express and the Cincinnati Limited at Blairsville, Pa. Fifty were injured in addition to the list of slain.
(Herbert)

BOBBY JONES' GOLF STROKE

The accompanying photographs of Bobby Jones, American amateur champion and British open title-holder, are enlargements from motion pictures taken by C. Bond Lloyd at East Lake. They give a complete analysis of the Atlanta golf marvel's drive, including the follow through. A camera of ultra-rapid speed was necessary. It takes 120 complete photographs to show the swing, and those chosen for the accompanying illustration were chosen to show the champion's motions in synchronized effect. Golfing aspirants will profit by a close study of the stroke as the pictures show correct timing with compactness of form, which results in a long shot without apparent effort.

NATURE'S OWN SCULPTURE—No, it's not a monument but a remarkable snapshot of a Barbary ewe and her kid perched on the highest pinnacle of the Washington zoo. (Herbert)

"VANISHING AMERICAN" BOBS UP AGAIN—This is Miss Ruth Muskrat, full-blooded Cherokee Indian girl, who has been awarded the Henry Morganthau prize for making the best use of her college education. She graduated from Mt. Holyoke college last year. (International)

THE NIGHT-BLOOMING CEREUS—Here is a blossom from one of the rare plants which blooms but once a year and then only at night. (International)

AFTERNOON WRAP—Of black crepe Elizabeth with a shirred collar ending in a scarf effect. Pointed fox fur trims the cuffs.

CHARMING FROCK OF GRAY CHIFFON—It is suitable for afternoon wear. The frock is made with tight-fitting bodice, smart with lace application. Gray lace appears in panels on the skirt. The sleeves and hem of the coat are edged with gray fox fur. (International)

SMART SPORTS COAT—Gertrude Olmstead wears this attractive white wool garment with black and red stripes. The collar is of natural Russian kit fox.

TRAVELING CAPE COAT—The cape is buttoned at the sides to give the effect of sleeves. The collar is of natural lynx.

MOTHER AND DAUGHTERS STUDENTS AT SAME COLLEGE—Mrs. Michael Heintz and her daughters, Hazel (left) and Marie, are enrolled in the University of Cincinnati. The mother is studying landscaping, Hazel liberal arts and Marie medicine. (International)

YOUTHFUL ESSAY WINNER—[illegible] Du-Bois, 13, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse DuBois, of Savannah, submitted the best paper on "Georgia's Part in the Revolution," and won the Savannah chapter, D. A. R., prize. Young DuBois graduated from junior high school recently.

DREAM IN WISTERIA—The stunning costume was designed by Henri Bendel, American importer and designer. Box pleated skirt and short box coat are in a basket material of white and wisteria. Blouse and scarf are of orchid.

INTRIGUING TWO-PIECE SUIT—It is of natural kasha, has a snappy military cape in lieu of sleeves, rolled collar and novel pockets trimmed in red. It is worn by Gertrude Olmstead, Metro-Goldwyn player.

Hubbard's young son, Grant, is shown holding the skin of the monster reptile and the puttee that saved his father's life. (International)

DEATH-DEALER OF THE CLOUDS—Will great cities be at the mercy of bombers from the air in the next war? This photo of a plane speeding through heavy clouds over London is significant in regard to the question. (By Alfred G. Buckham for international)

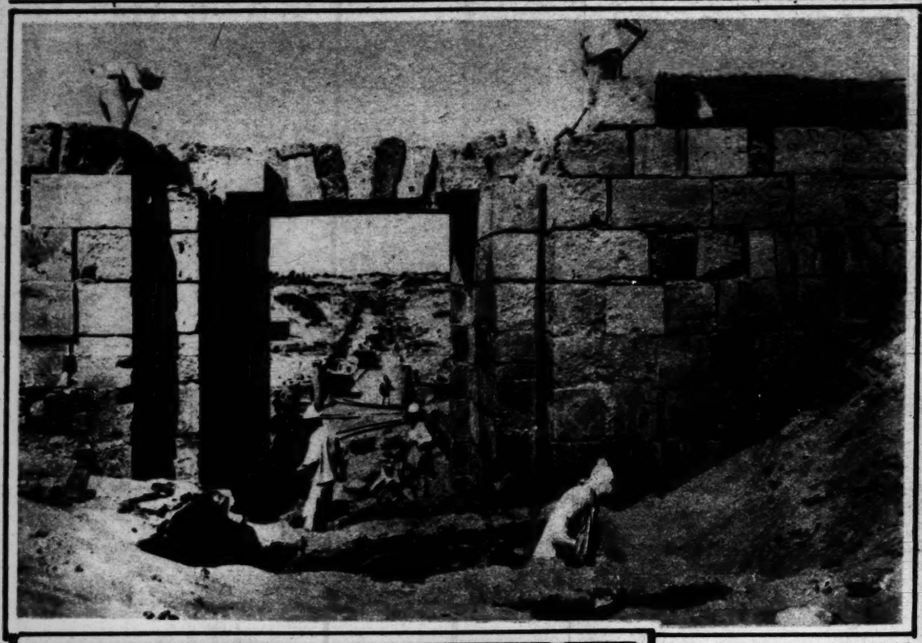

PRINCE OF WALES FALL—Jockey Dan Byers takes this fashionable tumble from the back of "Acetic," favorite of the Cedarhurst steeplechase. Byers escaped with a few scratches. (International)

AMERICA'S BEAUTY CHAMP TO COMPETE ABROAD—Miss Hazel Forbes, 16-year-old Long Island girl, sole American entry in the international beauty pageant to be held in Paris. (International)

THE GRANDEUR THAT WAS ROME is being revealed by the spade of the excavator in Africa. Here is shown the Justinian gate of Leptis Magna, sixth century portal opened by the Emperor Justinian in an effort to preserve the ruins of the city of Septimus Severus, already disappearing under the desert sands. At right, a new masterpiece—one of the 30 statues unearthed at Leptis Magna. It is called "The Divinity of the Sea" for lack of a better title. "MY KINGDOM FOR A HORSE"—Should King Richard III have been in Avondale when he made this offer there would have been a well-trained mount to save him from his plight and ready to fulfill his every command. For the Avondale Riding Stables supply blooded horses and finest English saddles and equipment. Even a step further in fulfilling the needs of Avondale is the provision of well-trained and gentle ponies for the little ones, and capable instructors for untrained riders. Lending all the beauty of nature to this king of outdoor sports are the miles and miles of lovely bridle paths that dip and wind over hill and dale of the Avondale Estates.

500,000 BY 1930—Walter Candler is doing his share toward attracting new citizens to Atlanta. Recently he built this dappled pool at his handsome home and stocked it with ducks and geese. The Story of a Boy Who Was Born Under a Stigma, And of a Girl Who Lifted it Through Faith

BLUE RIBBON FICTION

"By God! At last I've caught you at it, and here, in your mother's house."

GODFREY LORRISON GILL leaned against the mantel under his father's portrait and faced with all the desperation of cornered timidity the circle of his mother's relatives. To an imagination whose natural powers were heightened by the previous imbibing of a number of courage invoking cocktails to which the mild wine sipping of his birthday luncheon had put a culminating touch of extravagance, the people there present became a pack of hungry wolves, squatting, lolling, watching, shifting closer, waiting only for the inevitable collapse of his weak defiance for a fleshing of their fangs.

Lorrison knew, without turning to look, how inevitably like that portrait he appeared, how he, too, seemed to waver, to shrink back as its pictured occupant seemed always anxious to shrink into the background, to escape; wasn't that in truth the keynote of his inheritance? That longing to escape by no matter what dark and tortuous channels, backstairs, side exits, from reality? If only, young Lorrison now thought, he might escape from this one!

"So, you haven't really decided yet on any occupation for him, Mary?"

Mary's shrug carried into action the tired despair of her eyes, just now resting with a sort of resignation of maternity upon her son.

"Since he failed so disastrously in Bruce's office—no. I thought perhaps you, Martin, would—"

"Uncle Martin would hate to see me in that pretty new office of his, mother," said Lorrison, forestalling a protest from Uncle Martin which would have been less ambiguously worded.

"You can't blame him, can you, Mary, dearest — after what happened to Bruce?" This from Uncle Martin's wife.

Mary flushed, but her eyes showed their gleam of bitter ridicule.

"N-no, I honestly can't! But you see, Martin—well, George, then! Lorry hasn't quite found himself, has he? Doesn't know just where his real aptitudes may lie," but she spoke without conviction so. "O, we know where they lie!" was the retort unanimous.

The young man whose aptitudes were so frankly hinted at straightened a trifle from his long and slender slouch. He looked up at them sidelong as from under the shelter of an arm to ward off blows.

"I bet you could explain me a whole lot better to mother if I went out," he murmured. "You've all done justice to my birthday, thank you. If you'll excuse me, it's nearly four o'clock. Lunch was at one, you have had me all to yourselves for three hours."

Great Aunt Hilda using her stick, rose ponderously in jerks as witches rise. "We are going. Since your son, Mary, turns us out of his father's house, we are going——"

"Many happy returns of the day," muttered young Lorrison and dropped his wine glass which shattered merrily against the hearth.

When he had straightened from pushing the glass into the fire, the Lorrisons were bunched half in and half out of the front hall. It was a magnificent hall, once planned and executed by a Gill with the once great Gill fortune which Godfrey Lorrison's father had gone far to dissipate. This house was a sort of mausoleum to the New York name of Gill. It was empty, however, of any corpse except the martyred one of Mary's youth and of her possible hopes for Lorrison.

The good-bys of her relatives to "poor dear Mary" were today excessively tender. Great Aunt Hilda kissed her three times. Lorrison wondered how his mother bore the great nut-cracking impact of those jaws.

She came back into the room, looking particularly pale, proud and unapproachable. "Don't go yet, Lorry, I want you for a moment. Mathew Adriance will be here for tea."

"Good Lord, he won't want to see me. Have I got to——?"

She was at that a tall and formidable mother before whose look he shrunk, abjectly apologizing.

"Yes, you have indeed 'got to.' Sit down. Try to recover from the effects of the cocktails you drank before coming in late for dinner—keeping your guests waiting, in order I suppose, to make an especial exhibition of your—birthday compliment to me."

Lorrison crumpled into the nearest chair, wilted there, picking lamentably at his fingers.

He was still wilted and still picking when Adriance, unannounced, stepped into the long, silent, handsome room upon which the portrait of that infernal husband brooded with its uncertain furtive countenance.

The newcomer, a great lion of a man with a high head, a pince-nez, a tight mouth and a brilliant eye, direct for love or hatred, exchanged with Mary a long, expressive look.

"Have you, Mary?"

"Not yet."

"Ah, Lorrison. Your birthday, isn't it?"

A handshake was perfunctorily exchanged. Lorrison, however, managed a smile. He smiled easily enough and always with a strange shadowy air of hope and of disappointment.

"I'm afraid you won't particularly like your mother's birthday present for you."

"But I do, sir, most awfully. It's corking. Wait a second. A cigarette case. I'll show you. I've got it somewhere."

"She has another present."

Lorrison's pocket fumbling ceased. He wrinkled up his brows.

"O no, mother; have you?"

"Mathew, don't, please."

Mathew's smile at this was grim.

"A stepfather. I've waited near young doubtful fingers, placing his own so much firmer, thicker ones behind him.

"I am not a facile man, Gill," he said roundly. "I can advise you only to earn something from me better than a truce." He followed, a few steps, the boy's flight, which came abruptly upon a bow not altogether without its unprotesting dignity. "And all I have to say to you, young man, is when I'm master of this house—I'm buying it—you watch your step." His voice came in to Mary from the hall, where Lorrison made clatter with sticks and hatrack. "Drive out a few of your favorite devils. I give you a month's warning."

The front door crashed.

"Don't be too hard, Mathew," Mary pleaded from between the somber curtains, and, as he came in, she went to his arms and laid her tired and lovely head against his shoulder. "Remember his inheritance."

"I wish—with him always before my eyes—there was a chance of my forgetting it," said Mathew Adriance.

To a park bench, that April evening, the first bench that seemed to rise up under her failing legs, came little Fanny Brett after her day of revolution. There she rested, her blue eyes half closed, and deliberately conjured as an aid to her courage the face of that beloved photograph which had brought her to her present pass. The adored one in that picture had always looked as if he would like to escape from her adoration into his background and be gone. He had the air of saying with a shy, pleasant, hunted look, "I'm really awfully sorry, but I have to leave you—an important engagement." It was this peculiarity that especially endeared him to little Fanny. Benefactors, she had discovered, usually stay stolidly for their rewards.

Her hard working mother's death cut short an education designed to give Fanny Brett a step upward. Being cut so short, it left her only a shallow inch or so above her mother's actual standing and very far below the stature of a forgotten might-have-been. And it had condemned her to the immediate use of her most valuable gifts, skill with the needle, a small pale beauty, a charm, the pleading of two blue eyes. If only Mr. Stein, in giving her a position behind his ribbon counter, had not at the same time given her a position in his imagined future. It was this that yesterday, as a tribute to the Picture, she had so gallantly renounced.

Gallant she still was, but wilted. The day of failures had been warm. April has such days. Nevertheless, since it was April and the park showed a flush of sweet green, Fanny's mood gradually melted to a mist of daffodil desires. And, inevitably, since she was nineteen years old, some of the misty daffodil reverie floated around the well-dressed young man lounging on the bench beyond her own. His face was bent from her and rested on his hand, which in its turn was supported by an elbow against the green back of the bench. He was screwing the tip of a flexible cane into the gravel and drawing about the hole baffled hieroglyphics. He had taken off his hat, and the breeze, just making itself gratefully felt, roughened a head of darkish auburn hair. He was painfully thin for such a well-dressed young man, had the lines, Fanny thought, almost of starvation, but there was a handsome gold signet ring on his little finger. It was the signet ring catching and reflecting sunlight that had first attracted Fanny's attention from her deliberate summoning of a photograph.

The young man turned with an irritable movement, as if he had resented her, and looked straight into her eyes.

And—he was the adored. This was he, the ikon, the idol, the benefactor, lord and savior of her life, made flesh and blood. Only, of course, Fanny, holding herself down on her bench and furiously afire with the young blood of excitement, incredulity, tried in vain to tame her certainty—of course, he couldn't be, a red haired boy of twenty! That man had been ten years older than her mother, and was now more than ten years dead—blown up, as she knew, off the coast of Ireland, and buried there by an Irish priest. Her mother had read of it to her from the newspaper. Yet there was his ring, with the motto and the crest. She had not realized with what a microscopic cleverness her inner mind had made out both in their tiny photographed presentment. But she must do something, say something, not just sit there, lips quivering, eyes dilated, hands clenched, or he'd assuredly be saying, "I'm really awfully sorry, Fanny, but I have to leave you—an important engagement."

He had really, with a faithful copy of that expression so lovable to her, risen, obviously frightened by her extraordinary behavior, and was balancing for flight when her courage lent her its voice.

"Don't—please don't go. Your name is—must be—Gill—Godfrey Gill."

"Y-yes—yes." It was the voice, pleasant, hesitating, that would have gone with the man in the picture.

"You're perhaps—you must be—his son."

He flushed, and something that could best be described as a sort of sardonic ripple went all over him. "Yes—of course. I do look it, don't I? They tell me I act it, too. But, see here, you couldn't have known him!"

"It's because of him that I'm here now, this minute."

To her eyes he looked adorably puzzled and beautifully distressed, as though here were a responsibility that, as his father's son, he would be loath to assume. She hurried to relieve him.

"If he hadn't once been so wonderful." But here she broke off to express a sudden augmentation of her sympathy. "How proud you must be to be his son!"

"You see," Fanny went on, with her eager, rushing murmur, "he saved my mother from—how can I tell you?—the sort of easy, terrible—I mean, if it hadn't been for remembering him, I'd—last night—I'd have 'bettered myself' in the way that would have been the end of me—and all she did for me, and all he made it possible for her to do for me. I'd have had to burn his photograph. O, yes. I couldn't"—she lowered her voice, but her eyes stayed on his—"have said my prayers before it ever again—the way she taught me."

"You—say your prayers—before my father's picture?" There were a thousand question marks in his voice.

Fanny nodded. "Always. Yes. I said them—let me tell you!—extra hard last night. For if it hadn't been for that picture—its eyes, just because they don't force anything upon you, leave you free, beg you to be free—they were there on my bureau when I came in. I washed off Mr. Stein's — kiss — before then." She laughed here, then sobered to finish her story. "So, next morning I lost my job. That's why I'm here. I've answered fifty ads, I think. This bench seems like home. But—isn't it queer that you—you—YOU should have been just here today?"

It was so obvious that she expected him, being so miraculously sent, to occupy the extraordinarily uncharacteristic shoes of his father's past Good Deed that, "What can you do?" asked Godfrey Lorrison Gill, blinking at her.

"Sew." She held up her delicate and energetic hand.

Thoughtfully Lorrison took out a card from his pocketbook—one of his mother's. She'd given it to him to send with some flowers to a relation and he'd forgotten. Never before had he been a benefactor, and he felt awkward, hypocritical. In fact, his first charity bore legible evidence of sharp contriving and committed him to future maneuverings as well.

"This is my mother's card. I'll write a line on it to a dressmaker—Miss Julia—not far from here, who'd do, I think, almost anything my mother suggested. Mother made her. Mother's written her own name here, and I'll just scratch in above it. I hope you can find a situation for the bearer of card.' Your name is—?"

"Fanny Brett."

". . . 'for Miss Fanny Brett, whose skill and industry I can emphatically recommend.'" He was very serious, reading this aloud to her.

"I am—you can—she could," stuttered Fanny. "But you don't know it, do you? And what will your mother——?"

"Yes, I do. By looking at you. Better take it right off to Miss Julia—there's the number. You'll just have time before she closes. I'll speak to mother quickly, so's she can recommend you and bear me out." But he knew only too well that Miss Julia's inquiry would have to be intercepted before it reached his mother, that he himself somehow would have to bear himself out. "I—I'm afraid now, though, that I have to leave you. I——"

"Have an important engagement," she rather astonishingly helped him out. She held the card, stood up, and gave him a look of azure gratitude, of deep and sapphire worship.

"You are so ado-orably, wonderfully, gloriously—like him! O—good-by!"

In spite of their shriekings of mockery and lustful pride, he had composed a speech for Adriance and his mother. He had it in his dry throat and on his nervous tongue, a bitter regurgitation of humility, apology, promises of betterment. If only, just this once, his mother would believe it possible! With one hand against the door, just softly opened, he waited to command the nervous tremor of his knees. He had always been afraid of both these unassailable elders, doubly formidable now on the high peak of their mutual security, their pact against him and his Gill-ness. From within, that round voice of Adriance came unmitigated to his ears.

"It's no use, Mary. I've made up my mind about him. He walks a chalk line from today forward, or he walks out. It's for your sake. I've taken what the two have left of your life into my own hands, and you've done with your long sacrifice. At young Godfrey's first blunder—drunkenness, insolence, extravagance, carelessness—I don't care what name we have to give it, the young man leaves this house. I kick him out into the street, his inevitable destination, and I won't promise you not to give him a sound thrashing before he goes."

Lorrison, his cold hand gripping the doorknob, waited. The pause seemed misty, very long. His mother's voice sighed, "I suppose it's only the difference between a long—and hopeless—cure and a surgical operation." Hearing this sighing voice, the listener blinked and closed his eyes. "You know what I told you, Mathew. And I meant it. I'm leaving everything—my happiness, his worthlessness—in your hands. Do just exactly what you think most wise. God knows my methods with him have conspicuously failed. Only, do it without malice. Be his judge, and not my avenger, Mathew, please."

"I'll be his judge," said Adriance. "It isn't as if you hadn't lost all hope of him."

Mary Adriance was weeping. "I never had any hope, dear. He's been a long despair. I sometimes, looking at that terrible resemblance, wish that the inevitable end were quicker in its coming, that's all. So that in my lifetime it could be over and I able to forget."

On that last word Lorrison, outside the door, turned and, with an air of pale thoughtfulness, withdrew.

A far too active fortnight later, a black and secret fortnight, Lorrison met Fanny Brett on the back stairs of his mother's house. He was coming in that way—as his fortnight had instructed him to do—to avoid attention. He was using the banister with considerable assiduity and went back against it dangerously at sight of Fanny.

"What you doin' here, please, F-Fanny, Fanny Brett?"

"O-O, Mr. Gill!"

"What—you—doin' here, I say."

"Your mother telephoned Miss Julia to let her have a seamstress in the house for a few days. Miss Julia, you see, only took me on to oblige your mother, so she was very glad to find something else for me. So she sent me round at once. I'm here in this house—his house—and that is wonderful—too simply wonderful."

Lorrison's eyes dropped as he slunk past her, stumbling a little trying to make his progress less peculiar under the blind adoration of her unsuspecting eyes.

"But, she must know better now. When she thinks me over. It ought to have been pretty obvious," muttered Lorrison to his wet pillow.

And next he wondered, "Now, what would father do."

But he had not even the poor excuse of intoxication, only a cool, hard copy of the example all too eagerly illuminated for him by the tongue of Lorrison despair when, a few days later, creeping to her side as she came down, pale from her long day, into the dim light of the back hall, he murmured his request. "May I see you home tonight?"

He stood close enough to feel the ripple of her acquiescent delight.

"O, yes."

He strolled toward the front of the house to get his hat, whistling softly, amused to see Adriance pause above to let the "abomination" get safely out of his sight. Adriance would be puzzled, wouldn't he, that, hat in hand, the "abomination" should dive back into the recesses out of the new owner's sight and lordly knowledge. Lorrison meant to take Fanny out by the tradesmen's entrance.

He heard her, standing close at his elbow in the dim back passage, draw up all her courage in a breath.

"O, Mr. Gill, I know it's almost fresh——"

"What, Fanny?"

"But I heard there was one in the house, and——"

He waited, looking at her, smiling a horrid young Mephistophelian condescending smile, unlike the more characteristic faltering one he usually "managed."

"A portrait of your father. O, could I see it? Do you think? Just now. Once. If you'd be so good, if there's no one there, I mean."

There wasn't any one there, and Adriance would have gone out by this time, not being the man to hang very long over a banister. "Of course," said young Gill. "Come along."

He led her into the imposing spaces and through the heavy portieres and down the long room, where he turned on a light and watched her face as it lifted to his father's.

It was the purest lamp of worship, the first surely that had ever burned there, and many a man convinced of his own virtue has been surprised and

Ed Wynn's Question Box

—BY— ED WYNN

Dear Mr. Wynn:—Can you give me an example that will fully describe what is meant by the saying: "There are two sides to every question?" Yours truly—E. MULSION.

Answer:—Sure I can. Say two girls are discussing matrimony, two sides to that subject would be as follows: One girl could say, "I do not intend getting married till I am 30 years old," and the other girl could say, "I do not intend being 30 years old till I get married."

* * * *

Dear Mr. Wynn:—Do you believe people should cry over spilled milk? Sincerely—EARL E. RISER.

Answer:—I sure do as long as the price is 19 cents a quart.

* * * *

Dear Mr. Wynn:—In an article I read in one of the morning papers I saw the following headlines: "Robbed by Comic-Opera Bandits." What in the world is meant by "Comic-Opera Bandits"? Truly yours—C. NARIO.

Answer:—That means Robbers who, after tying their victims so they can't move, use "Old Gags" to keep them quiet.

* * * *

Dear Mr. Wynn:—I saw a man with both his hands bandaged and I asked him how it happened. He didn't answer me. I later found out the reason he didn't answer me was because he is deaf and dumb. I also heard his hands were bandaged because every joint in his fingers is broken. How do you account for an accident like that? Sincerely—DINAH MITE.

Answer:—He is deaf and dumb, the joints of his fingers are broken, very simple: He most likely broke them by cracking jokes on his fingers.

Dear Mr. Wynn:—What is meant by "A gentleman farmer"? Yours truly—Q. KUMBER.

Dear Mr. Wynn:—I am a man 24 years of age and extremely bashful. I am madly in love with a girl my own age and would like to marry her, but I am too bashful to even broach the subject. I will never get over my bashfulness, and do not know what to do. Can you give me an idea that will help me? Yours truly—O. G. O'GOSH.

Answer:—The next time you call on her get the conversation switched around to the different kinds of drinks there are in the world. Then each of you take turns asking each other which drink you prefer. Now you're all set. When she asks you: "Do you like tea?" turn to her and say: "Yes, but I like the next letter better."

Dear Mr. Wynn:—I am a girl 23 years old and have lived all my life in the country, and I have just made up my mind to move to the city. I am a pretty good cook and that is why I am writing to you. What I want to know is: "Do many city people "keep" cooks? Truly yours—MARMA LAIDE.

Answer:—They do not. But most people engage another as soon as one leaves.

* * * *

Dear Mr. Wynn:—It isn't that I am opposed to a person playing cards for money, but I would like you to settle an argument between my wife and me. The question is, "Can an honest man play poker"? Sincerely—JACK O'DIAMONDS.

Answer:—Of course he can, but he won't win.

* * * *

Dear Mr. Wynn:—My father says the silliest things. For instance, last night he said his bald head was just like heaven. Don't you think that is a silly thing for a man my father's age to say? Truly yours—VAZZLE EEN.

Answer:—I would say instead of being silly your dad is rather bright. The reason your father compares a bald head to heaven is that he simply means: "There is no parting there."

* * * *

Dear Mr. Wynn:—I am a boy 19 years of age. Next Friday night I am to make a speech. My father says I should not attempt to make a speech in front of an inteligent audience unless I am full of my subject. As it happens my subject is "Whisky." Please tell me what to do. Sincerely—E. RASER.

For Players of Whist

—BY— A. R. METCALF

LACKS the courage to pass" was the verdict pronounced by an expert upon an ambitious player.

When a no-trump declaration has been made you should keep still unless you have a declaration that offers a reasonable prospect of game. Failure to observe this rule is, perhaps, the most common fault in bridge. The following deal is an example:

THE HANDS.

S—8, 6, 3, 2.
H—A, 10, 5, 3.
C—7, 6, 4.
D—9, 5.

C—J,10,9, 5,3.
D—8,6.

N. W. E. S.

S—K,J,9,7.
H—K,9,2.
C—K,Q,. 8,2.
D—A,3.

S—10, 5, 4.
H—8, 6.
C—A.
D—K, Q, J, 10, 7, 4, 2.

Score: 0—0. East dealt and bid one no trump. South two diamonds, west three clubs and the bidding closed. North had the opening lead.

West scored eleven tricks and game.

Had south kept still, as he should have done, north and south would have scored eight tricks and a bonus of 100 points against a no-trump declaration. With six losing cards in his hand the chance of making game against a no-trump declaration simply did not exist.

South should have expected to force his opponents into a bid either of hearts or spades, but in this case a lowly club bid sufficed for game.

The only feature of the play was the management by west of the spade suit at tricks two, three, and four in order to get rid of the losing diamond in the west hand.

Had west broached the trump suit at once, he could not have made game.

Cards of exit are frequently of more value than cards of reentry; the deuce of more value than an ace. One player showed a fine understanding of this principle in the beautiful deal which follows:

West scored eight tricks.

Trick one revealed the club suit as hopeless on account of the exhibit in dummy. South, therefore, started his rather cheap heart suit, which he finally established, despite the great strength of the declarer.

West made no mistakes whatever and against ordinary play would have secured game easily. North frustrated his plans by magnificent play at trick ten in discarding the ace of spades and retaining the deuce. In making this play north had no means of knowing that his partner held the spade king, nor did he care.

He did know that if he kept the ace of spades, west, a good player, would lead spades at trick eleven. Playing the ace of spades might lose a trick but, also, it might save the game and no good player would hesitate over such a proposition if he understood it.

Had the declarer made the queen of clubs at trick eleven, the result would have been the same, as south would have discarded the ten of spades.

INSTALLMENT XXIV.

Mr. Crayton's Miracle.

THE telegram that sent the profoundly agitated Mr. Crayton from the table, followed by the startled eyes of his wife and daughter, was brief and to the point.

"A further credit of six hundred thousand, subject to immediate use, has been arranged at this bank. Please acknowledge receipt of this wire."

It was incredible! Once clear of the dining room he reread it, fearful that his senses were tricking him. But no, there were those laconic words, definite and unequivocal. Some mysterious influence had operated at the eleventh hour to provide means to finance his battle. There was now hope that ruin could be turned to triumph. His fortune, instead of being swept away, might now be greatly increased.

Again he became the man of action. He must at once get into long distance touch with the New York bankers, as well as his associates at home. First of all, the message must be verified.

He decided not to attempt a connection on the hotel wire, where privacy could not be assured, but instead would motor to the nearest large city, sixty miles away, and make his phone connections there.

"Send for my chauffeur and tell him to have my car here immediately. If the car isn't in condition, tell him to get another."

He then went to his room and packed his bag. He might decide to catch a train and go home without returning here.

When he came down the car was standing at the door. In the darkness he caught only a glimpse of the chauffeur, whose collar was turned up, well hiding his features. He gave a brief order and the car noiselessly glided off through the drizzle and darkness of the deserted streets.

Mr. Crayton settled back. So far so good. He had left no message for his wife. It would be just as well that she remain in ignorance of this sudden change in his fortunes. She was convinced that he was financially ruined and that she, with her private fortune, could compel him to consent to Virginia's marriage to Count de Barsac. Very well, let her think so. She would have a sudden awakening.

Within two hours he was at the telephone and, after a long delay, he secured a connection with the New York bankers at his club.

"Yes, it's true that a credit of six hundred thousand has been arranged," said the banker. "I was informed just before I left the office."

Beyond this confirmation, which was all Mr. Crayton really wished, the banker was either in ignorance or was purposely evading the source of this credit. Mr. Crayton assumed that his associate back home had by some miracle succeeded in arranging it. All efforts to get the latter on the wire were in vain. His house reported that he was out and was not expected home until later.

Mr. Crayton, instead of returning to Edgemoor to rejoin his wife and daughter, decided to catch a night train for home.

The chauffeur could take the car back and explain to Mrs. Crayton that her husband had gone on by train. He then was driven to the railway station.

Up to this time he had not caught a good look at the chauffeur. If he gave any thought to him, it was a fleeting impression that the man's clothes were much tidier than those he had been wearing. Even this did not prepare him for the surprise he now experienced.

The man, immaculately washed and divested of his coating of grease and oil, wearing a trim uniform instead of the grimy overalls, was a revelation. "Why, good Lord," thought Mr. Crayton, "this man is positively handsome."

Aloud he remarked dryly: "I wouldn't have known you, Wells. As I recall you from our previous meetings, you were about the greasiest, oiliest, most untidy man I'd ever seen. I didn't know whether you were white or black."

"I'm glad you notice an improvement, sir," he said. "You saw me when I was working on the car. Now that the repairs are done, I've had time to devote some attention to myself. I hope you like the effect."

Mr. Crayton smiled grimly and nodded. "Yes, the effect is all I could wish—more, in fact," he added to himself. He had just gotten rid of one attractive chauffeur who had intrigued his daughter's fancy; now here was another who, in point of manly pulchritude, was well nigh irresistible. He wondered what effect her association with this Adonis would have on Virginia's capricious fancy. He reflected that Mrs. Crayton, having got rid of one of the count's rivals, would now have another thrust upon her. The thought gave him considerable satisfaction.

"Return to Edgemoor," he instructed, "and if Mrs. Crayton is still awake tell her that I've gone home by train. She will possibly want you to follow with them in the morning."

Dick Wells, alias Richard Wellborne, Harvard '22, touched his cap. Having at the request of Rasher sent to the New York bank the telegram that arranged a credit for Mr. Crayton, he was able to guess that Mr. Crayton's good humor was due to that financial godsend. As he drove away, he called out cheerily: "Good-by, Mr. Crayton. I hope your financial troubles are now over."

An instant later he was out of earshot, leaving the gaping astounded Mr. Crayton rooted to the sidewalk.

"Now, what the devil does he know about my troubles? I haven't breathed a word of it to him."

This surprising mystery furnished many moments of puzzled speculation. "It gets me," was the only conclusion he could reach.

It was about one-thirty when Wells returned to Edgemoor. Except for a dim light in the office, where the night clerk was dozing, the hotel was in darkness. As he did not know that Mr. Crayton had left without notifying his wife, it seemed unnecessary to arouse her at this hour. So he turned in, pleasantly cheered by the part he was playing in this little drama. He assumed that Rasher's princely aid to Mr. Crayton was due to the fact that Rasher was in love with Virginia, although nothing to that effect had been said.

Believing this, he felt that his future course was to guard Rasher's interests and circumvent the fortune-hunting count. In every possible way he would seek to divert the girl's thoughts from the Frenchman, even to the point of making love to her himself. But always, he vowed, with loyal regard to his friend, Rasher.

Then he drifted off to healthy slumber, blissfully unaware that others in the hotel were tossing sleeplessly on their pillows.

Mrs. Crayton had not slept a wink. Her husband's mysterious departure worried her greatly. She had sat up until midnight awaiting his return and had then gone to bed. She was genuinely sorry for him, but, nevertheless, she found a certain grim satisfaction in the conviction that now she held the winning cards in her hand and that Virginia's marriage to the count was assured. Countess de Barsac! It was a pleasant thought. How the people back home would be impressed! She even saw herself an honored guest at the ancient chateau of the Barsacs with obsequious peasantry bowing and scraping whenever she appeared.

Virginia, equally sleepless, was trying to devise some means of saving her father from financial ruin without yielding to this odious match with de Barsac, but no other solution appeared. In reckless despair she thought she might as well consent and have it over with. When a troubled sleep finally came, it brought unpleasant nightmares in which somebody was trying to push her off a cliff.

In another room in the hotel a cigarette glowed in the darkness. There lay Pierre de Barsac debating the course to follow. A heavy odor of dead tobacco smoke hung in the air, for the windows were tightly closed. Here, in this stuffy room, he and the maid, Celeste, had sat for hours, smoking countless cigarettes and talking tensely in low voices. Their discussion concerned the financial crisis confronting Mr. Crayton.

Broadway Banter :: :: —By— FORNEY WYLY

THE smartest revue in town is George White's new "Scandals." It's the thing at the moment to see this revue ahead of all others. The show serves to bring Ann Pennington back to Broadway again, and they've also detached Harry Richmond from the "Club Richmond" to do most of the hot-air. Mr. Richmond is the first so-called toastmaster of a revue I've found who doesn't drive you slightly cuckoo before he lets up. Then Frances Williams, the only good reason I've ever found for the Charleston, is present in all her boldness and is as usual a knock-out. Willie and Eugene Howard I didn't think nearly as funny as they seemed to think they were. Tom Patricola's dances are fine, but a dancing youngster, Buster West, appeared to walk away with the show. The fragile Fairbanks sisters dance daintily, while the not-so-fragile McCarthy sisters sing their blues songs well enough.

Is there anyone you can think of who isn't in the "Scandals?" And add to these celebrities the stunning costumes, funny sketches, and ravishing girls and you'll get a faint idea of why everybody is pulling out what hair they have left over the show. "This Is My Lucky Day" and "The Birth of the Blues," are the best musical numbers and are headed for immediate ball-room assassination.

Ann Pennington is this year devoting her time toward popularizing a new dance called "Black Bottom," which she hopes will succeed the Charleston. I am delighted to learn that somebody is at last going to do something about the Charleston. I wish Miss Pennington all the luck in the world. However, I live to see the day when the Driving club, for instance, is filled with couples doing the "Black Bottom." It's the sort of dance everybody is going to want to do and most of them do it atrociously. During the "Black Bottom" reign, you'll hear more "I beg your pardon" collisions in ball rooms than you've heard since you were last tangled up in the grapevine. Individual ball-rooms would not be a bad idea for "Black Bottom" devotees.

Well, they're all three married now and what's more, they've gotten their husbands together. Many a night had Charlotte, Grace and Sara lain alongside of each other, and after one of them had said, "Who do you guess we'll marry?" talked it all over with no decision reached. They know now, however. A few weeks ago, Freddy and Sara Schoen Duggan had as their week-end guests, at Spring Lake, Charlie and Grace Goldsmith Cox, as well as George and Charlotte Meador Fletcher. Obviously these are the three men in all the world who have no choice but to like each other tremendously.

And thus it is that the first chapter in that little novel, "The Life of Sara and Grace," which this column appears to have been writing, is allowed to end happily.

It was in "The Garrick Gaieties" that "Broadway Banter" came nearest to making its stage debut. As your correspondent stood in the wings of the Garrick theater successfully getting in the way of all incoming and outgoing actors, young Sterling Holloway, the "Gaieties" star, sped up to me and grabbed my astoundingly clean handkerchief to use in his coat-pocket during the "Mountain Greenery" number. And no mother watching her child in the throes of an amateur show ever swelled with quite as much pride as I did at the professional way in which that charming little handkerchief o' mine conducted itself. I hope at an early date to get a pair of my sox worn in the new "Scandals," and I haven't yet given up hope of having one of my most poisonous ties suddenly blind the eyes of a "Sunny" audience.

By the way, Sterling's mother, Mrs. Sterling Price Holloway, of Cedartown, is a prominent Georgian here with us for a while. And on the first night Mrs. Holloway saw the show there were present in the audience the William Candlers, other southerners who showed good judgment in picking out the "Gaieties" to see.

If they hadn't had that back-window, I don't see how they could have had "The Man from Toronto." Every time anything happened, a face would appear at this window and what they saw would have to do for the plot until a new face turned up to peer through. Besides popularizing back-windows, the next best thing "The Man From Toronto" does is to bring back to Broadway Mr. Gavin Muir, whose rendition of a bored young man is unequaled anywhere. No one after seeing "The Man From Toronto" is going to rush from the theater screaming, "I've seen the best play I ever saw," but at that they won't be able to say they were bored.

More and more is everyone going in for artificial sunburn. I suppose it was to have been expected. It's so much easier to drop into a beauty parlor, plant yourself in a chair and say, "I'll just take a ninety-degrees in the sun once-over this morning." The heavens can use such remarkably bad judgment if you leave it to them to do your sunburning for you. They never seem to know when to stop and the idea of sunburn, everybody knows, is to give your depressing face a renovated look. It is always well to bear in mind, however, that even the sun has its limitations.

You see people these days with tanned faces who haven't gotten up before the sun went down in years.

Escaping The Bars of Justice

Sensational, But Seldom, Are Modern Escapes --- Heavy Odds Seal Prison Bars

TO THE casual newspaper reader, the escape from Atlanta of Gerald Chapman, and the subsequent escape of his pal, George Anderson, represent just about the last word in daring prison escapes, but these escapes dim in comparison with many other notable deliveries from the tangled web of justice. Chapman and Anderson had money to aid them, whereas most of the other great escapes of recent years were accomplished with little more than a pair of hands and a keen set of wits.

When one has money the immensity of the job shrinks perceptibly. When one has only one's wits the thing approaches the miraculous.

Prisons nowadays are so constructed and so guarded as to make escape practically impossible without inside aid. The system of check-up, for one thing, is so complete that an escape can be attempted, usually, only during periods that can be counted in seconds. The planning of months must bear fruit in one desperate moment. To be detected during that moment means death.

Not Impregnable.

Despite this extreme watchfulness, however, there is no prison in the United States that might be called impregnable. By one means or another, by violence or subterfuge, the ingenious convict manages to break that fierce grip of justice. True, he is usually captured, but that is another phase of the system altogether. To get out is difficult, goodness knows, but to stay out—that is something else.

The names of these latter geniuses could be written, legibly, on a postage stamp.

Most attempts are attempted at night, after the prisoners are locked in their cells. The chief reason is that, once clear of the prison, the fugitive can be assured of four or five hours of darkness. Another reason is that the number of officers is reduced to a minimum. Institutions employing 100 guards in the daytime will probably not have more than 20 to 25 on duty at night.

The scene during a successful escape is one never to be forgotten, for once a prisoner is detected in the act, instantly the wild, harrowing shriek of the siren fills the air, searchlights sweep the walls and their environs, and everywhere is great activity.

Sometimes the night is rent with angry spurts of flame as the fleeing prisoner exchanges shots with his deadly enemies on the walls, and if he has friends waiting, one may hear the drone of a high-powered car speeding away into the darkness.

At the Atlanta federal penitentiary, one of the most heavily guarded prisons in the country, a feature of the system is the blinding glare of lights around the prison walls. For an escaping prisoner to attempt to cross this path of light means certain death. He is at once the target for the armed guards on the walls and in the watch towers.

How, then, did Gerald Chapman handle this problem? Chapman put out the lights. Master criminal that he was, he was not foolhardy enough the brave those lights.

Chapman had been sent to Atlanta for a twenty-five-year term following his conviction in the $2,000,000 mail truck robbery in New York. In prison he was a marked man, perhaps the most carefully guarded prisoner in the institution, yet he escaped. Confined in the prison hospital, he and another prisoner spread the bars of the window, slid down ropes made from sheets, cut the wires controlling the lighting system, and fled over the wall via a ladder placed there by assistants outside.

The late Gerald Chapman — The late Dutch Anderson

Two who made getaways from Atlanta.

Hunt On Again.

Within two days Chapman was captured after he had been wounded three times in a gun battle near Athens, Ga. Seriously wounded, he was confined in an Athens hospital. His pretty nurse sympathized with him. During the night she turned to get him a drink of water, and in that moment he was out the window. Again the hunt was on.

Two days later he was again found, this time in the hospital basement. He was a ghastly sight, more dead than alive, yet in the excitement which followed, Chapman walked out, and was not seen again until his ultimate capture in Muncie, Ind.

How did George Anderson escape the glaring path of light? He tunneled under it? With three other caught until after he had avenged the capture of Chapman by killing Ben Hance and his wife for "snitching."

And when he was caught in Grand Rapids, Mich., it was to die at the hands of a policeman he had mortally wounded.

Tracy-Merrill Escape.

In the far west few escapes compare for violence and sensation with the famous escape more than twenty years ago of Harry Tracy and David Merrill from the Oregon state prison. These men, crack shots both, literally shot themselves out of confinement. Of nine men shot, seven were killed.

Two heavy rifles, left in the molding shop by a released prisoner, were all Tracy and Merrill needed to effect their escape. After killing three at the prison they brought a reign of terror in the northwest for several weeks. They would appear at a farm, hold up the household, dine, force the farmer to go to town and buy supplies for them under threat of exterminating his entire family, and then move on.

In the course of his flight Tracy kidnaped a farmhand and made him serve as a valet for two days. The two escaped prisoners had a dispute and agreed to hold a duel. Tracy double-crossed Merrill and killed him before his pal had completed the agreed number of paces.

Last Bullet.

Thereafter Tracy time and again found himself trapped, but each time, until the last time, he shot himself out of his troubles, killing four more of his pursuers. In the final battle he was badly wounded and wrote finis to his career by committing suicide with his last bullet.

This was spectacular, but it was no more desperate than the escape of James Trana, 21-year-old burglar, from Sing Sing last fall. Young Trana accomplished his escape merely by keeping his hand in his pocket.

The prisoners had returned to their cells after a Thanksgiving party in the prison chapel when Trana, who had served four months of a twenty-year term, walked out into the corridor, having spread the bars to his cell. Guards were all around. It did not seem possible that this unarmed boy could accomplish an escape. Yet he did.

With his right hand in his hip pocket Trana walked rapidly toward W. L. Murphy, an armed guard, who sat outside a guard house 300 feet away. Murphy saw Trana coming toward him, but thought the fellow was a trusty. Finally he called for him to halt, but by this time Trana was near enough to the guard to speak to him.

"Don't move or I'll blow your brains out!" said the prisoner, making an ominous movement with his concealed hand. Murphy didn't move.

Then Edward Kennedy, another guard, unarmed, who was coming to relieve Murphy, appeared. Trana forced him to walk ahead of him out of the gate, later took the man's overcoat, and jumped into an automobile. That was the last seen of young Mr. Trana.

"He bluffed 'em," said Warden Lawes. "If that can happen, a million prisoners can escape."

Yet it did happen.

No Two Alike.

No two escapes ever seem to be alike. Prisoners have tunneled their way out of jails with no more effective tool than a kitchen spoon. In Leavenworth some years ago a prisoner was detected after he had almost finished cutting through the bars of his cell. A search revealed no implement. Finally he said he had done it with a thread of worsted, a bit of glue and some emery powder.

Winona Green

"Joe, if you can prove that to me, I'll waive the punishment for your attempted escape," said the warden.

Within twenty-one hours the prisoner had severed the bar. He had taken the thread from his wool socks, applied glue, and then rubbed the thread in the powder. When it dried he had as effective a tool as the sharpest of steel saws. Thereafter he wore cotton socks.

Another unusual escape at Leavenworth was that of six convicts who stole a locomotive and rode out of the prison yard flourishing dummy guns so like the real as to be undis-

Forgiveness At Last For

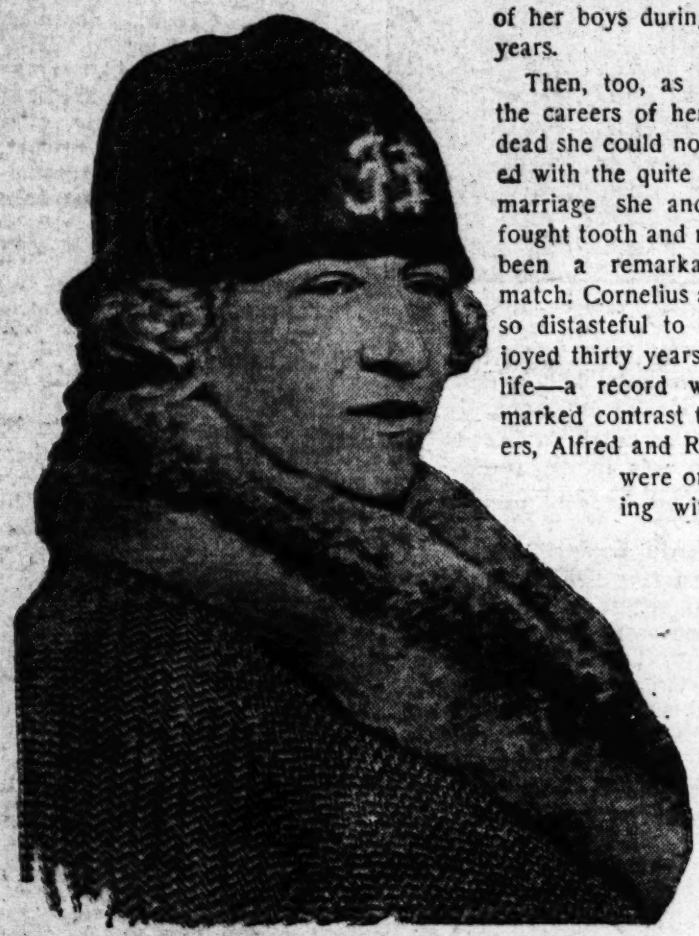

How the Family Quarrel That Had Persiste Through Thirty Years of Unrelenting Bitterness Came To Be So Suddenly and Happily Ended

THE most famous family quarrel in the history of American fashionable society has come to a dramatically sudden and pleasant end.

Mrs. "Cornie" Vanderbilt and her daughter, Grace, are sharing for the first time the stately luxury of "The Breakers," the dowager Mrs. Vanderbilt's magnificent mansion at Newport, and this means, of course, that the senior Mrs. Vanderbilt has at last forgiven her son, "Cornie," for having married contrary to her own and her husband's wishes.

For thirty years the dowager Mrs. Vanderbilt has grimly followed her dead husband's example in refusing to forgive her son for his disobedience and in relentless bitterness toward the former Grace Wilson, the woman whose love the young man valued more than a great fortune or the good will of his parents.

And now, when General Cornelius Vanderbilt is long past middle age, wher he has a son who is already married and a daughter old enough to be, his mother suddenly forgives him everything and holds out the hand of love to the so long unwelcome wife and her children.

The former Grace Wilson, the much courted New York society belle whom General "Cornie" Vanderbilt married in spite of the bitter opposition of his father and mother.

The reconciliation was entirely unexpected to the smart set and even the forgiven ones, General Vanderbilt and his family, are said to have been surprised. There was nothing to give the world any warning of the olive branch of peace which the senior Mrs. Vanderbilt has waved with such beneficent results.

Many different influences are believed to have played a part in making her do what it is believed her stern, unyielding husband would never have done even though he had lived to pass the century mark.

Her advancing age and the numerous sorrows which have recently clouded her life undoubtedly had a great deal to do with the softening of Mrs. Vanderbilt's heart and the ending of the long standing feud.

Four sons have been born to her. One died while a student at Yale. Another, Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, was lost with the "Lusitania." Death took a third, Reginald, only last year while he was still in the prime of life. This left General Cornelius Vanderbilt her sole surviving son. And the mother, made less prideful by age and grief, finally decided that she could not bear to continue estranged from this last of her boys during her few remaining years.

Then, too, as she meditated over the careers of her children living and dead she could not help being impressed with the quite obvious fact that the marriage she and her husband had fought tooth and nail against had really been a remarkably successful love match. Cornelius and the wife who was so distasteful to his parents have enjoyed thirty years of felicitous married life—a record which stands out in marked contrast to those of his brothers, Alfred and Reggie, both of whom were once divorced and living with their second wives when they died.

In the soberness of her old age the mother was forced to admit that of all her married sons Cornelius was the only one who had never made a failure of marriage and had not smirched the family escutcheon with the scandal of divorce.

The charm of young Miss Grace Vanderbilt and her as yet undecided matrimonial future are other things that are believed to have played a big part in leading the dowager Mrs. Vanderbilt to bury the hatchet with her son and his family. Of course, Mrs. Vanderbilt has often seen her granddaughter at social affairs and in spite of her bitterness toward the girl's mother she could not repress a strong admiration for Grace.

She seemed to lack what the senior Mrs. Vanderbilt regards as the atrociously bad habits of so many girls of the younger generation.

It seemed a shame to her that such a charming girl should be still unpromised in marriage and the grandmother, as much interested in matchmaking as she was when she tried to direct the course of her son, Cornelius' love affairs, wished that she might do something to help along the matrimonial prospects of Miss Grace. She finally decided that this could best be done only by forgiving her son and inviting her daughter-in-law and her granddaughter to share "The Breakers" with her this summer.

The now forgiven General Cornelius Vanderbilt, who was cut off with only a half million in his father's will because he married contrary to his parents' wishes.

Like many other family quarrels, the one that split the Vanderbilt family ostensibly had a very trivial matter for its cause. Although it was always suspected that the Vanderbilts had some other reasons for opposing Grace Wilson as the bride of their eldest son, they insisted that it was solely because of the difference of four years in their ages, the young woman being the elder.

The parents professed to believe that this slight seniority on the part of the bride-to-be was sufficient to make her an unsuitable love mate for their eldest son and the prospective head of the family. On this account the elder Mr. Vanderbilt went to his grave unforgiving of Cornelius and his wife persisted in holding aloof from the offending son and his family.

Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius anderbilt, Jr., who are also free to njoy the stately luxury of grandma's ewport palace—but perhaps will not care to do so at the same time.

But in spite of Miss Wilson's popularity, her charm, high social position nd considerable wealth, Cornelius anderbilt's parents did not regard her s a fit mate for him. When he persted in marrying her in spite of their reats of disinheritance and other dire hings there was started a quarrel hich persisted until only a few weeks go.

The death of the eldest Vanderbilt on, William H., while a student at ale, left Cornelius the future head of he family and the one who should set he pace in making a proper marriage ccording to the Vanderbilt standards. When his choice fell on Grace Wilson met with the bitter opposition of his arents. There were weeks of stormy uarreling, with the iron wills of the enior Vanderbilts pitted against the ven stouter determination of their son.

Finally the parents apparently yielded and the wedding was set for June 1 in the year 1896. The ceremony was to take place at the bride's home. Caterers came, the huge wedding cake was all baked and it is estimated that nearly $10,000 worth of flowers had been strewn about the Wilson mansion when suddenly the announcement came that the ceremony would not take place as scheduled—that it had been indifinitely postponed.

The Vanderbilts announced that "Cornie" was seriously ill with inflammatory rheumatism and that this was why the wedding had to be postponed. The bride's family endorsed the truth of this statement and intimated that as soon as the young man was able to hobble to the altar the wedding would take place.

The gossips, however, insisted that the young man wasn't ill at all. It was whispered that his family either was restraining him from the marriage by force or had succeeded in scaring him out of it with their threats of disinheritance.

It turned out that the gossips were wrong just as they so often are. Cornelius Vanderbilt, who was then twenty-two years old, was really ill and he had no intention of giving up the girl he loved, no matter what pressure his family exerted to have him jilt her and marry some one else.

The fight had not begun. The opening engagement of it came on July 4 while the sufferer from rheumatism was slowly convalescing. On that day, according to report, his father went to his son's sick room and stormily resumed his effort to have the young man abandon his plan to marry Grace Wilson.

Pale and weak as he was from pain and high fever, the young man's strength of will and his devotion to his sweetheart were quite unimpaired. He refused to consider what his father suggested with such positive finality that the old gentleman flew into a rage. It has always been suspected that this fit of anger was responsible for the stroke of apoplexy which the senior Mr. Vanderbilt suffered a short time afterward. That stroke prevented his ever going to his office again and made him an invalid up to the day of his death three years later.

It is supposed it was at this sick room interview that old Cornelius told his son that unless he gave up Grace Wilson he would lose the $50,000,000 inheritance which had been planned for him and be cut off with only a paltry half-million. But this ultimatum did not have at al the effect on the young man that the father hoped it would. Young "Cornie" felt willing to lose many times $50,000,000 in order to marry the girl of his choice.

The dowager Mrs. Vanderbilt, whose heart has at last softened toward her son and the daughter-in-law whom she so long ignored.

The "Cornie" Vanderbilts' daughter, Grace, whose charm and unsatisfied matrimonial ambitions are believed to have had a great deal to do with bringing about the reconciliation between her parents and her grandmother.

The postponed wedding took place in August—without a single Vanderbilt in attendance! The bridegroom, however, did not seem to mind the significant absence of his relatives. Although still lame from his long illness and realizing that he had lost his rightful share of one of the biggest American fortunes, the bridegroom looked radiantly happy and extremely proud of his beautiful bride. She and her parents had made it clear to the young man that it made no difference to them if he did not have a penny.

From that time on young Mr. Vanderbile was long known as the "pauper millionaire." He set out to prove that without a fortune to back him he could still make a success of life. Taking a job at $100 a month he wore overalls all day and devoted nearly all his evenings to work at his engineering profession.

His independence and determination soon won him hundreds of influential and socially prominent friends who were anxious not only to help him financially but to meet him and his bride socially even though by so doing they would stir the wrath of his parents.

Without the backing of an enormous fortune Cornelius Vanderbilt made himself a successful inventor, a distinguished civil engineer and a famous military man. He brought more real distinction to his family than both his brothers put together, although they divided between them the millions that should have been his.

When his father died the young man dutifully went to the funeral, but his mother and others of the family refused to acknowledge his presence by so much as a nod. They were determined to show him that his defiance of the parental will in marrying Grace Wilson could not be forgiven.

When the old gentleman's will was read it was found that he had been true to his word and had cut off Cornelius with $500,000. But the vindictive father had not been able to find any way of depriving his son of a $1,000,000 trust fund left him by his grandfather. Of course, this was a quite considerable fortune, but it was small in comparison to Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt.

Later on Cornelius succeeded in forcing from the estate an additional $7,500,000. This was accomplished through the generosity of his brothers and not through any relenting of his mother toward him. When others of the family married, "Cornie" Vanderbilt and his wife were never invited to the fashionable weddings held at "The Breakers." There was never any "welcome" on the mat for them at this or any of the other Vanderbilt mansions.

A Grain of Mustard Seed ::

conquered by a sudden unsuspected devil hidden within him, but the reverse was now this youth's experience—she wasn't a nutbrown maid, but a pale little saint and the light in her blue eyes was not for love—nor for him, and—and—standing outside of a suddenly closed gate, the young man's heart, forgetful of devil worship, grew blind with something more tender than desire. To her feet it faltered. He did not know that he groped towards her, drew her hand as though through bars his reverence had suddenly built up all around her.

"O Fanny, Fanny, my darling, he wasn't worth it, you know, no more than I am, but give me a little of that look of yours, too. I do so worshipfully love you."

The bars vanished. She lay in his arms close to a holiness in him which he had never known, had never been allowed to know.

They stood, mouth to mouth, under his father's portrait, which still desired to escape even from this reality, which it had nevertheless once long ago most humbly experienced.

Judgment from an experience, more limited and more illusioned, descended upon the pair.

"By God! At last I've caught you at it, and here, in your mother's house."

Adriance, with a glare of all the sudden lights of the big room, Adriance glittering, pince-nez and eyes and teeth, with sword-like condemnation.

"It's the seamstress, isn't it? The little girl for whom you forged a recommendation—I've been round to see Miss Julia—saw that card. I'm sorry, Miss er—er—you must go. Stop round tomorrow for whatever is owed to you. This young gentleman will be free to follow you presently."

A towering Christian athlete of mature righteousness, he stepped up close to Lorrison and twisted a big hand into his collar.

That son of Godfrey Gill disengaged himself with a clever wrench more decisive than any action Adriance had yet noticed in him.

"Excuse me. Just a minute, while I take Miss Brett to the door. I'll be back."

"O will you?" Adriance blocked the exit.

The pale and cool young man confronted him with smiling steadiness.

"Don't make a scene, Adriance. I will be back. I'm not afraid of you."

He passed with the seamstress on his arm.

After a murmur of parting, of reassurance, of God knows what hasty promises, at the front door, Lorrison turned to face the avenger, adequately armed. The predestined victim eyed that weapon thoughtfully.

"I'm sorry, Adriance," he said, "you are not going to have the pleasure of canning me—unless you kill me first. Still less are you going to have the pleasure of kicking me out into the street, which may or may not be my obvious destination. I am going out now and for always. I'll send you my address as soon as I find one. You'll let John pack up my things and bring them to me, I suppose. If my mother"—his unhappy childhood died with a brief spasm of its features—"ever wants to see me again she can send for me. If not, tell her she is at liberty to—forget. Good-by."

If he had been at leisure to entertain superstitious fears Lorrison might have detected an unpleasant omen in the creature that accosted him at the foot of the house steps on his immediate descent into exile. He was so grateful for what seemed to him now a miraculous escape from physical violence, Adriance having had that rod in pickle for him since his infancy, that he had nothing for the omen but a vague smile, a coin, a murmur. The blue faced, shrunken, shivery figure had stuttered in a thickish, pleasant voice, "Mr. Gill live here?"

"No—Adriance. Mr. Mathew Adriance."

A block further on, in swift pursuit of Fanny, already occasionally visible walking doubtfully with her head bent, he realized that the man couldn't possibly have been a beggar. He'd been decidedly well dressed in tweeds not very different from his own. It was the ghastly countenance, starved, twitched, with a coarse streak of red hair down along its nose, that had given him that impulse towards charity. Drunk? Worse than drunk. Possessed. Then a horrible chill ran all over the young exile's flesh. That man had been a ruin of himself; a distortion, a travesty, but so much like him in outline, in effect, that, met in a dim room, passed rapidly, he might—Lorrison gave one quick, scared look behind and found the phantom in pursuit. It walked with a bounding jerkiness. He lost it by going around a block or two and overtaking Fanny at her fifth tear-blinded crossing. At sight of her tears he forgot the phantom, which, forgotten, followed him, nevertheless, to the door of Fanny's lodgings.

"O what have we done? What have we done?" asked Fanny. "Is it because I am just a seamstress? Is it? Do be honest with me."

"It's because I'm a dog with a bad name, beloved Fanny, and therefore to be promptly hanged. Come on. You'll teach me how to make our living, won't you? I know quite a lot about machinery."

"But, dear Mr. Gill——"

"Lorrison, please, if you don't mind."

"I wish it could be Godfrey."

"No one has ever. Yes. You call me Godfrey, make me proud of it."

She stiffened beside him. "If you weren't I'd never let you kiss me again!"

"As soon as ever we get inside, then! Will your landlady let me have a room?"

"She has only just one, Godfrey, a horrid one up under the roof."

"That will fit. I'm a pauper. I hope they'll let John bring my stuff. I'd just bought a new tooth brush this morning, luckily. I feel like something a mile up in the air. Fanny, your affianced husband, just by bluffing, escaped the most unholy thrashing."

"Who was that awful man?"

"My mother's husband."

Fanny at once looked wise, lost all her mystification. "Ah. I see it all. He's been jealous of that other Godfrey, and you have simply inherited the jealousy. He must always have been waiting for an excuse to rid himself of you. He'd have liked to kill you, dear. I saw that in his eyes."

"U-hum," carelessly agreed the smiling son of Gill, and whistled a little tune through his teeth.

But there are many tunes to be taught by life to whistlers. During the weeks that followed young Godfrey learned several extraordinarily lively ones, difficult of execution. The worship of predestined devils had perhaps been easier.

Shortly after he had found his job at an automobile factory, life brought to his queer little garret room a visitor. It came there, stumbling and swaying.

The factory hand had been washing a grimy head and shoulders in his cracked wash basin and, looking up, turned cold to see what stood upon his threshold—the phantom that had followed him.

"Who in God's name?"

"Your father, Godfrey, boy."

After a ghostly pause in which they eyed each other, the owner of the attic bedroom dragged his specter in. As it told its history it swept something, hordes of invisible crawling somethings, from its face, its neck, its knees, the bed, the wall.

"I rec-cognized you at the door, Godfrey boy. So Mary's married old Mat. I won't bother 'em. No Enoch Arden stuff, though. Don't give a damn. Rather be here with you for what time's left. You know, I wasn't drowned. Had my money—gold, in a belt—plenty of it. Good, easy escape from all those damned Lorrisons. I let the Irish priest bury the other chap. I put my clothes on him, ring, watch, every darn thing except the money belt."

"That priest sent home your ring."

"So I see. On your finger. Keep it, my boy. Keep it. We were washed up on a beach — little sheltered cove—that chap and I. He was stark dead. Ever see a drowned man? Queer sight. Queer place. Queer stroke of luck. I'd always wanted to —well, to escape. And it was a queer life afterwards. Very queer. Now, you see, after a good run for my money, they've got me. Sometimes it's hundred-leggers, mostly it's crabs. They don't scare me much—sometimes." He rose and clawed. "Look out for me, sonny, will you? They'll eat my eyes!"

Now, this was a secret which the son of Gill must keep from all the world, even from little Fanny, who said her prayers before a photograph. The doctor administered morphine and told the white-faced, tight-lipped young man who had introduced him furtively into this small chamber of horrors that it couldn't last much longer. "The man's being eaten alive, inside and out, by forces of which his crabs and hundred-leggers are merely symbols. A fortnight, maybe. An old friend of your father's? Let me take him to the hospital, Mr. Gill. It's no job for a boy like you —too damn hideous. You look——"

"Awfully like him," muttered Godfrey, Jr., but the doctor, though he gave him a queer, suspicious glance, did not quite catch the muttered words, which Godfrey quickly changed as he repeated them.

"You'll get your reward, sonny, never fear; a damn fine, glittering reward," wept the specter in some more lucent moment, "when all these things have eaten me up, all over, through and through, you look into my pockets. They're not so empty as you think."

The son almost preferred his delirium to his lucidity. He was very glad that the room was in a garret and that John had left his trunk and box below stairs without coming up. The landlady said she might stand it—for a fortnight—with extra payly twenty-five years, and I've won her. After what I had to see of her first marriage——"

"No, Mathew, please!"

Mathew drew a very deep and rather shaken breath, looking at his reward. "After twenty-five years, next month, the first of May."

The young man stood there, forgotten by his elders, showing a white vacancy. He lifted from it an uncertain regard to his mother, who negligently took his hand.

"Mother, you're happy?"

She then faced him, holding the hand rather tightly before letting it fall. "I am, indeed, as happy as the past and you, Lorry, will let me be."

"All right. Then I'm glad." He managed his smile again. "You don't love me a little bit, Adriance, nor I you, to be frank, but we can call a truce for mother's sake, can't we?" He held out the hand his mother had so queerly pinched and dropped.

Adriance squared back his big thick shoulders and through his pince-nez looked down at the long ment, if he'd use more morphine nights.

The stupor of death was upon her living husband when one late afternoon Mary and her respectable paramour found their pale, grim, distasteful way to Lorrison's quarters. They were not, by their own request, announced. They climbed up the stairs and knocked.

Lorrison came to the door and leaped out to them, shutting in his secret, as he leaned, white and sweating, against the barrier.

"Come downstairs, mother. Please. I mean—not in there. I can't see you—it's not—fit."

Adriance ground out, "The girl's in there. Why don't you go down, Mary, and wait for me? I can manage him alone."

There was a sharp intention of some sort in both their faces. The desperate keeper of a secret could hear behind his door the faint rattle of a dying breath. It wouldn't be long now. How would this correct stepfather look if he could see the contents of that room? And this pale Lorrison mother of his, so proud, what would she say? He bit his white, uncertain lip.

"Won't you go down?"

"We'll see you here. We want those jewels of your mother's."

Lorrison merely gasped.

"Yes," his mother agreed wearily. "I found they'd been taken the morning after you left the house. You did come back for a moment, John tells me, that evening. And went into my room. Allison passed you in the hall. We've been waiting for an address. We didn't send for the police."

Lorrison gasped again, more faintly.

"You took a litlte picture of me from the mantel—very touching." Her hardness made him wince. "I suppose you imagined it would distract my attention, or perhaps make me more lenient to the loss of other things—the sapphire and diamond earrings, the pearls, the emerald bracelet, the things your father gave me."

"Ah!" He sighed this out, being illuminated.

"We'll give you," said Adriance, "five minutes by my watch to hand them over. After five minutes, if they are not in my possession, I'll have your landlady, below there, telephone for the police. No, don't look at your mother. She has forgotten that she ever was the mother of a—thief."

But Lorrison continued to look. If there had been only a glimmer of—what was it that had always been missed there?—faith.

Devils, proud and vengeful devils, danced about his heart. Ah, here was his chance to punish these unbelievers, to condemn them. It was really with that stiffness of limbs that have been tied to the stake of an ordeal that he moved at last. The five minutes were nearly over, so hard had been his battle.

"Will you wait below there on the second landing, mother, Adriance, while I go in and—look?"

Mary bent her head, her hand groped for the greasy railing of the stairs, and he could see tears on her face. She went down slowly, Adriance following her with murmurs of consolation.

Young Godfrey Lorrison went past the rattling, terrible burden of his narrow bed, which he himself had not occupied for many nights, and searched the pockets hung beside his emptier own in the shaky wardrobe. The coat lining sagged with a concentrated burden. There were the jewels, a key, Godfrey Mason Gill's own door key, with which he must simply have let himself in, have walked to the familiar room, have rifled it of his own gifts, and so have walked out again, mistaken in the dimness for a furtive son. Yes, and there was the little photograph.

Lorrison came out, locked his door, and went down the one steep flight to stand before his mother. He was all one blaze of shame. He had tried to concoct some other story, but his imagination was entirely lame. There lay a husband who would so soon be dead. The truth would so needless-

THE Abingdon Press announce "A Faggot of Torches," by F. W. Boreham. Price $1.75; "Science and Religion," by William North Rice. Price 50 cents; "Christ in Man-Making," by Herman Harrell Horne. Price 50 cents; "Greek Culture and the Greek Testament," by Doremus Abiny Hayes. Price $1.50.

"A Faggot of Torches" is the eighteenth book of Boreham. This is a further study in great texts.

It does not need to be demonstrated that "words represent a vital element in history." When the Creator brought order out of the void He said, "Let there be light." The principle of the creative power of speech "has never ceased to operate," and "through the agency of words darkness is being continually dispelled and new worlds called into being." And this further remark is made by the author: "By means of some sublime word—startling, piercing, convincing, alluring—a new man is made, and a new man ushers in a new age. Were it not for those words—words of pity and grace and life everlasting—the world would still be without form and void and darkness would be upon the face of the deep." But because of these words there is sunlight on every shore.

What preacher would not gladly give the price of the volume for one chapter on Tokichi Ishii, A Gentleman in Prison. This is a modern miracle of divine grace as marvelous as can be found in all the annals of spiritual transformation. The text of Tokichi Ishii was, "Father forgive them, for they know not what they do."

There are twenty-one other chapters on the favorite texts of well-known characters. This is a volume for laymen as truly as for preachers.

"Science and Religion," by Dr. Rice, is a small volume which is especially pertinent to our day of religious perplexities and theological confusion.

Professor Rice sets forth in this paragraph the main thesis upon which the discussion in this volume rests: "Man cannot fail to be profoundly interested in the world of thought which pure science ignores. He cannot help asking what is the efficient cause of the phenomena of nature. Is that efficient cause a Personality to which human personality is analogous? If the efficient cause of natural phenomena is personal and intelligent, we cannot fail to be interested in the question of the character and motives of that Personality, and its relation to our own life and destiny. The question of efficient causation in nature belongs to philosophy. Our individual relation to the Personality conceived to be the soul of the universe is the theme of religion. Philosophy and religion are thus intimately related. Far less intimate is the relation between science and religion. There can be no contradiction between science and religion, as there can be no collision between trains running on parallel tracks."

The author enumerates the five unnecessary conflicts of science and religion; the form of the earth, the relation of the earth to the sun, the age of the earth, the antiquity of man and the origin of species of living beings.

The only hope of discriminating between the incidental and the vital certainties of the faith is in the same viewpoint of the author on matters of science and religion.

"Christ in Man-Making," by Horne, strikingly sets forth the place in human life of the four great life forces: Heredity, Environment, the Will of Man and Divine Power.

The author does not seek to reform the reader's theology, but to give it a new angle of approach and a new application. In considering the place of Christ in the making of men he presents his argument first, as related to the program of eugenics, or the science of new birth to Christ; then as related to eugenics or the science of good environment to Christ; then he endeavors to show the place of Christ in forming good will, "which we might call, by analogy, eudokia." He believes that "the atoning work of Christ is efficacious first in the individual life, and thence affects the social environment and the future of the race."

The contribution of the author consists in the fact that he shows how Jesus himself placed emphasis on the different life forces which some of his representatives have ignored and even ridiculed.

"Greek Culture and the Greek Testament," by Professor Hayes possesses interpretative value in the study of the New Testament.

Professor Hayes adds a new radiance to "the glory that was Greece" in this volume of understanding and appreciation. "Wonderful" is the high word with which he describes the ancient Greeks—their land, language and literature; and the most wonderful volume is the New Testament, the greatest Greek book. He reminds us that ancient Greece had a right to the name, "the Holy Land of the Ideal," and that while we moderns are tamely content with second-best things, "in Greece in science and philosophy, in literature and in art, there has been the most complete realization of the ideal all-around human life of a nation the world has yet seen." He makes a strong plea for the retention of the classics in the curriculum of the college, and declares that "posterity despises uncommercial scholarship," and that we demand an education in efficiency rather than in the humanities," claiming that "as our colleges and universities have neglected the classics barbarism has gradually returned," and that "the triumph of efficiency in the last Great War was at the same time the triumph of barbarism in Europe."

The author shows how inadequate are many of our familiar translations. Take for example "In my Father's house are many mansions"—the Greek word does not mean mansions, but "abiding places," "resting places," "homes." There is no thought of mansions in the word, no least suggestion of magnificence or stateliness, or coldness or liveried servants or painful formality. It is just the plain, simple, hearty, wholesome words for Home—"In my Father's house are many dwelling places, resting places, homes."

The author makes corrections of several familiar readings which are equally suggestive.

The World's Greatest Pictures

"CHILDREN OF CHARLES I." :: :: BY VAN DYCK

This is the 21st of a series of 52 greatest paintings, which represent the choice of art directors throughout North America. Reproduction of this art masterpiece appears in today's issue of The Constitution's rotagravure section.

BY EUGENE P. CONLEY

Poverty and art are blood relations. Art thrives in the rich soil of poverty. It's an exceptional man, who, burdened with the handicap of being born of wealth, dares to match his genius with a Rembrandt, a Correggio or a Millet, but the subject of this article, Anthony Van Dyck, was an exceptional man.

His masterpiece, "Children of Charles I." is one of many paintings made of the royal family of England. The child on the right is the famous "Baby Stuart." When he grew up he was crowned James II., king of Great Britain—his brother on the left was crowned Charles II., and his sister was the mother of William III., of Orange.

Born in the year fifteen hundred ninety-nine at Antwerp, Van Dyck early showed artistic accomplishments. When fifteen years old his folks enrolled him in the Rubens' school. His skill stood him in high favor with the master.

One day, in the master's absence, some of the students entered his studio to see his latest picture, "The Descent From Cross." Now when mischievous boys get together the worst generally happens. And in this instance it did. One of the young culprits fell against the picture smearing the paint not yet dry—a masterpiece in ruin—there's a situation to face. All sought safety in typical boyish fashion, save young Anthony. Picking up a pallete, he painted away the ruin, and gave the picture the appearance of its former loveliness.

Perceptive talents are properties of the master. When Rubens returned, his eyes fell immediately upon "the patch." He wasn't interested in who fell against the painting—his only inquiry was, "Who fixed it up?" Van Dyck, abashed, replied: "I did it. I cannot tell a lie," thus antedating the cherry-tree incident over one hundred years. Instead of scolding, Rubens complimented the young artist, and spoke ardently of his future.

Italy was regarded as the finishing school of art, and thither Van Dyck, then aged twenty-two, went to further his study. "Friend of Rubens" was the only password needed to enter the society of the elite. He was besieged with so many flattering commissions that his two months' stay stretched into four years before he returned to his native city.

Rubens, theretofore recognized as the greatest painter of the day, soon found he had a rival in Van Dyck, whose studio was being flooded with commissions. Nobility considered it a compliment to sit before the graceful Anthony for portraits. The six years he stayed in Antwerp this time were probably the most productive years of his life.

Along about the year sixteen hundred thirty-one, (the same year Captain John Smith, of Colony fame, died), Van Dyck's ambition turned westward. "Beyond the Alps lies Italy," and across the Channel was England with Charles I. on the throne. There this great portrait painter proceeded, and there his genius caught the fancy of the king, who favored him with many commissions—appointed him painter to the court—conferred upon him the honor of knighthood, and gave him an annual pension of two hundred pounds.

In the prime of manhood, when life begins to shape itself, Van Dyck succumbed, aged only forty-two. Vitality, deprived of recess, spent its force endeavoring to keep pace with energy, but the name Van Dyck goes marching down through posterity unforgotten.

THE BLACK ABBOT

A Blue

SYNOPSIS.

Harry, Lord Chelford, occupies Fossaway manor, the home of the Chelfords for hundreds of years. Here he lives with his half-brother, Dick Alford, who manages his estate. Lord Harry devoted most of his time gathering together the legends concerning Chelford.

The picturesque ruins of an old abbey lie at one end of the estate and they are supposed to be the haunt of one of its former occupants. The apparition is known in the neighborhood as the Black Abbot.

Lord Chelford is engaged to Leslie Gwyn, whose brother, Arthur, acts as Lord Chelford's solicitor.

Fabrian Gilder, Arthur's chief clerk, discovers that his employer is in financial difficulties.

INSTALLMENT III.

Gold.

GILDER came back to find his employer leaning over his desk, his head between his hands, and laid a slip of paper before him.

"What is this?" asked Gwyn, startled.

"A six months' bill for seven thousand pounds. I've put an extra thousand in for luck," said Gilder coolly.

Gwyn read the document quickly. It was a bill and required only his signature and that of Harry, Earl of Chelford, to make it convertible into solid cash.

"I dare not do it—I simply dare not do it!"

"Why tell him it's a bill at all?" asked Gilder. "You can get him by himself, spin a yarn—you have a fertile imagination—but I suggest that you tell him you need his signature to release some of your sister's property, and once his name is on the back of the bill——"

Arthur Gwyn looked up sharply. Was it a coincidence that this excuse should be suggested? There was nothing in the head clerk's face to suggest otherwise.

"But when it comes due?" he asked irresolutely, as he turned the document over and over in his hands.

"In six months' time he'll be married and if things aren't better with you he'll either have to meet the bill or hush the matter up."

The eyes of the two men met.

"You're on edge of ruin, my young friend," said Gilder, "and I'm rather concerned. If you go down, my livelihood disappears."

How true this was, Arthur learned one bitter day.

"You make a deuced sight more out of it than I do," he grumbled as he wrote the name of a bank across the face of the bill.

"I spend less than you, and when I get money I know how to keep it.

"You might even raise the sum yourself," said his employer, with a feeble attempt at jocularity.

"I might," said Gilder grimly, "but as I said before, I know how to take care of my own, and lending money to you is not my notion of a good investment."

He had been out of the room only a few minutes when he came back and, closing the door carefully behind him:

"Do you know a Miss Wenner?" he asked.

Mr. Gwyn frowned.

"Yes. What does she want?"

"She says she must see you on an urgent personal matter. Is she one of your—friends?"

Arthur shook his head.

"N—no—I have met her. She was Chelford's secretary. Can't you find out what she wants?"

"I've tried, but it is a matter personal to you? I can easily stall her."

Arthur thought for a while. She might have something important to tell him.

"Ask her to come in," he said.

A few minutes later Mary Wenner came into the room and greeted him with a familiar nod.

"Well, my dear, this is an unexpected pleasure. You are getting prettier every time I see you."

She accepted the flattery as her right and sat on the edge of his desk.

"I've been down to Fossaway, Arthur," she said.

"Silly girl," he smiled. "But I thought that affair was all over and done with. You've got to be good, Mary. Chelford is going to marry my sister."

"Isn't that grand! And I'm not surprised. I saw you working when I was at Fossaway."

She slipped down from the desk and dropped both her hands on his shoulders.

"Arthur, I'm tired of stenoging! And I want like sin to get back on that cold-blooded hound, Dick Alford. I've been fired out once for proposing to a man—I'm going to take a second chance. We've been good pals, Arthur."

He murmured something in his alarm.

"Listen—don't turn down a good thing. You can marry me and I'll bring you a bigger dowry than your sister will take to Harry Chelford."

He stared at her.

"You? . . . Dowry?" he stammered.

She nodded slowly.

"Marry me and I'll take you to the place where you can lay your hands on fifteen tons of Spanish gold—the Chelford treasure! Two and a half million pounds!"

* * * *

Fifteen tons of gold! Two and a half million sterling!

Arthur Gwyn stared at the girl incredulously. But she was making no idle statement, and that she at least believed what she said was clear from her flushed face and shining eyes. For a second he was speechless.

"Fifteen tons of gold?" He frowned and smiled at the same time. "You're mad, Mary!"

"Mad, am I?" She nodded vigorously. "O, indeed, I dare say you think so, but you won't be thinking that way long! I have found the Chelford treasure, I tell you."

He sat down heavily in his chair, his startled eyes still fixed upon hers. He was for the moment inarticulate.

"Rubbish!" he managed to say at last. "There is no Chelford treasure! Living so long in the same house with Harry Chelford has made you as mad as he!"

She walked slowly to the desk and, with her palms on the ledge, leaned down over him.

"You think that, do you?" she asked in a steady voice. "I was three years Lord Chelford's secretary, and it's true I had this treasure stuff dinned into me from morning till night. The sight of a black lettered book makes me ill even now, and the plans of Fossaway manor that I've studied—well, I don't like to think of them! I've lived with this treasure for three years, Arthur, and there have been times when I could have screamed when it was mentioned. I got so that I came to like Dick Alford, just because he never spoke to me about it. And then one day there came a bundle of plans from London—Harry had a standing order with an old bookseller to send him anything the could find about Chelfordbury or Fossaway manor. Harry had gone up to town that morning and I had no other work to do, so I went through these dusty old sheets to index them. And on the third sheet I found something that made me open my eyes."

"What was it?" asked Arthur carelessly.

She looked at him with a quiet smile.

"A lot has to happen before I tell you that," she said. "Arthur, if I give you this, or your share of this, will you marry me?"

Arthur looked at her steadily.

"If you can put me next to a million, or half a million," he said slowly, "I would marry you if you were the planest woman on the face of the earth instead of being the bonniest, prettiest little angel——"

"You can keep that stuff for later," she said practically.

She opened her handbag and took out a paper and he watched with fascinated interest. If he expected the secret of the Chelford treasure to be laid before him in writing he was to be disappointed.

"I'm not much of a lawyer," said Mary as she smoothed out the paper and laid it on his blotting pad, "but I think this is binding on both sides."

He took up the paper with a wry face and read it.

"In consideration of receiving one-half of the Chelford treasure, I, Arthur Gwyn, of Hill house, Chelfordbury, Sussex, agree to bind myself to Mary Agnes Wenner in the holy bonds of matrimony within one month of the treasure being found and divided."

"Is that in order?" she asked, watching his face.

He put the paper down.

"My dear girl—" he began, in his suavest manner.

"Listen, Arthur." She perched herself on the edge of the desk. "This is the time for 'yeses' and 'noes,' for 'I wills' and 'I won'ts!' I'm not in love with you and you're not in love with me. But I want a home and a position. I may not be a lady, but I am ladylike, and I have lived long enough with swagger people to make no mistakes. Is it yes or is it no?"

"Does it strike you," he said, "that the Chelford treasure is not yours or mine to divide? That it belongs to Harry Chelfird, his heirs and his successors?"

"It is treasure trove," she said startlingly. "I know the law of the country, because I've talked this thing over with Harry times without number. Treasures found hidden after hundreds of years has to be divided between the state and the finder."

He shook his head with a smile.

"Our Mary is a lawyer!" he bantered. "You're wrong, my dear. That is only the case if the owner of the money cannot be found. In the present instance there is no doubt whatever that the treasure would belong to Chelford."

He saw her face fall and went on.

"I don't know that that is going to inconvenience us seriously," he said, looking her straight in the eyes. "You cannot lose what you never had, eh?"

She drew a deep sigh of relief.

"It is Harry's, I suppose, but after the way he treated me, and all that I've done for him——"

"Yes—yes," he said soothingly. "We needn't worry about Harry. The only question is, have you found the treasure?"

She nodded.

"You've actually seen it?"

"No," she hesitated, "I haven't seen it. I hadn't time. But I saw the boxes through the grating. The door was locked and I was so excited that I had to come out and walk around. And then Dick Alford saw me."

Arthur was puzzled. He knew this girl well enough; they had been good friends in the days when she was Chelford's secretary, and she had been a most useful agent of his.

"Now let's get down to brass tacks," he said brusquely. "Where did you see this treasure, and when?"

"I'll tell you when. I saw it two days ago," she said, to his surprise, for he had thought she was talking about some experience she had had when she was an inmate of Fossaway manor.

"Two days ago?" he gasped.

"Two days ago," she affirmed. "And as to where, well, there's another matter to be settled before we get as far as that, Arthur. Will you sign that agreement?"

He looked at the paper again. His training in the law, his natural instincts against putting his name under any document which bound him, urged him to temporize with her.

"It is yes or no," she said, as though she read his mind. "I'm not going to fool around with you unless you mean business. I'll take it to Harry, and maybe if I put him in possession of this gold he'll do the right thing by me."

And, seeing that he made no move, she took up the paper, folded it determinedly and put it in her little satchel.

"What's the hurry?" he said in alarm. "Mary, you're mad to expect me to take a big decision like this without giving the matter a moment's thought. Don't you realize what you're asking me to do? You're proposing an act of sheer robbery and you're asking me to become an accomplice. After all—" He shrugged his shoulders.

"If your conscience is hurting you," she said, "we'll leave it. I'm not the sort of girl who'd throw herself at any man's head. I'll take it along to Harry and see if his conscience is busy."

She turned to go, but before she reached the door he had intercepted her.

"Don't be silly and don't be unreasonable." He was more than a little agitated. "It's a big thing you're asking——"

"It's a big thing I'm giving," she said impatiently. "Two million and a half pounds—there's nothing mean about that."

He took her by the arm and forcibly drew her back.

"Sit down and don't be a fool," he said. "I've told you already I'll marry you tomorrow, and I'll go farther and say that there never was a time when money was sweeter to me than it is at the moment."

"Will you sign that note?"

He skimmed it through quickly, making sure that he was under no obligation if the treasure did not materialize, and, picking up a pen, he made a little correction, she watching suspiciously, and signed with a flourish.

"What is that you've put into the paper?" she demanded.

"An exit for Arthur Gwyn," he said with a whimsical smile. "The document reads, 'In consideration of receiving on behalf of my client, Lord Chelford,' etc., etc."

At first she did not understand, and then a slow smile dawned on her face.

"I see," she nodded. "That means that if anything comes out you're acting for him and not for yourself. Arthur, there are times when I think you're clever!"

Arthur Gwyn smiled as he put his arm about her and led her to the window. Below, thick streams of road traffic were passing east and west. A great lorry was under his eyes; he saw an inscription on its side, "five tons." It would require three such lorries to move the Chelford treasure, he thought, and for a moment his head reeled.

"I'll tell you how clever I am when I handle the first bar of the Chelford treasure. And you'll know how clever you are when I've dealt with the last. There are two millions in this. Now tell me, where is this gold?"

She looked at him for a second, and then, lowering her voice:

"In the vaults of Chelford abbey," she said.

For a second neither spoke, and then:

"Will you see your sister, Mr. Gwyn? She has just arrived."

Arthur Gwyn spun around, an oath on his lips. Gilder had come noiselessly into the room, his inscrutable eyes fixed upon his employer. Not a muscle of his face betrayed whether or not he had overheard the last words.

* * * *

Leslie Gwyn's occupations at Hill house were well defined. Though her brother did not maintain a very expensive or elaborate establishment, he lived in a style consonant with the position he held in the county. There were little dinner parties, an occasional dance, and in the winter Arthur, who was a good man to hounds and was ambitious to be master of the local pack, entertained on a lavish scale the more prominent members of the hunt. In these amenities Leslie acted as hostess for her brother, and at all times was the real housekeeper of the establishment. For all his extravagance he was a careful and grudging house-master, required that the necessities of life should be bought in the cheapest markets, that the best at the lowest proce should be found upon his table.

The resolve to go to town that morning had been born of a sudden impulse. The day was her own and she could do as she liked with it. For some reason the idea of lunching alone did not appeal to her. She had a wild thought of going on to Fossaway manor, but remembered that Wednesday was a day that Dick Alford gave up entirely to visiting his tenant farmers. She did not attempt to explain to herself why the prospect of lunching tete-t-tete with her fiance was ever more distasteful than lunching alone. She had got beyond the point of finding excuses for herself; she felt a certain recklessness; was conscious that her manner and attitude of mind were defiant. Against what and whom?

With a lift of her pretty shoulders she shrugged the matter out of consideration. All that she knew was that the preoccupation of Dick Alford and the unlikelihood of seeing him made a visit to Fossaway manor not only undesirable but out of the question.

She would go to town; the decision was taken in an instant, and she went upstairs and dressed hurriedly while the gardener wheeled her little two-seater to the drive before the house. Five minutes later she was spinning along the straight road towards the railway station. She had plenty of time; indeed, there was a certainty that she would arrive at the rail at least half an hour before the train left, even if it pulled out on time.

As she entered Fontwell Cutting she thought she saw a familiar form crossing the field towards the road a quarter of a mile away, and her heart jumped when she emerged and slid down the steep little hill on the village road she discovered that she had not been mistaken, and brought her car to a halt as Dick Alford opened a field gate and came out.

He greeted her with a wave of his hand and a smile and, to her consternation, would have passed on had she not called him back.

"You are very jumpy and cross this morning," she said, and to her surprise he admitted that fault, though she had seen nothing in his manner to deserve the challenge she had made.

"I am very annoyed, indeed. If there is one thing I don't want to see, it is our good farms turned into little residential estates for the city's gentry! I sold Red farm to Mr. Leonard last week under the impression that the old—"—he checked a naughty word—"gentleman wanted to extend his holding, though why on earth he should want to buy Red farm, which is the poorest land around here, I couldn't guess."

"And what has he done?"

Dick was indeed very much annoyed, she noticed now, and was secretly amused. She had a woman's satisfaction in seeing the man she liked thrown momentarily off his balance and revealing himself in a light that was new to her.

"And what has the old—gentleman done?" she mocked him.

"He has resold the farm to a wretched man in London—though the purchaser is not aware that such a sale is invalid without my signature."

"A stranger?" she asked.

"Yes; though he has been living in the neighborhood all summer. He has a cottage somewhere about here."

"On the Ravensrill?" she asked in surprise.

"That is the fellow," he nodded. "I've never seen him, but I understood he was only staying here for a few months. And now I find that the beggar's bought Red farm and intends putting up something in stucco with bow windows! And I daresay he will dig an artificial pond, start a rosary, and turn God's productive acres into a forcing house for sickly flowers!"

"Why shouldn't he?" she asked coldly, and he stared at her. "After all, you said that was the poorest land around here, and if it cannot be useful it may as well be beautiful. I rather like artificial ponds and rosaries."

In spite of his annoyance he laughed.

"Then probably you'll go to Mr. Gilder's house warming," he said.

She started.

"Who?" she asked.

"Mr. Gilder. He's something in the city—probably a deuce of a swell in his own way, but I wish he'd gone somewhere else. And as to Leonard, I've already told him that I shall not go to his funeral."

"Dick, you ought to be ashamed of yourself!" she said indignantly. "Poor old man!" Then, in a different viice: "You don't know his Christian name?"

"Whose—Leonard's?"

"Don't be stupid—Mr. Gilder's."

Dick frowned.

"Fabrian," he said at last. "What a name! It sounds like a secret society."

She wondered if Arthur knew of this enterprise of his clerk; it was hardly likely that Mr. Gilder would buy property in the neighborhood without consulting his chief. For the moment she deemed it prudent to turn the subject.

"If you were nice and kind, and brotherly," she said, "you would come along with me to the station and garage my car like a nice man."

He stood irresolutely, and for a moment she went hot at the implied rebuff. And then:

"I'm wasting my master's time," he said, "but there are occasions when pleasure must interfere with duty, and this is one of them. Do you mind if I drive? I have no faith in women drivers."

"You are very rude," she said, but nevertheless moved aside to let him take the wheel.

"How is Harry this morning?"

"Fine," he said sardonically. And then, heartily ashamed of himself: "Harry is trying a new patent medicine. You've never been in his bedroom? That is an indelicate question to ask, but have you?"

She shook her head, the hint of laughter in her eyes.

"There are about eight hundred and forty-five varieties of patent medicines in Harry's bedroom," he said grimly. "Once every three months we have a spring cleaning and chuck 'em out! Really, there isn't very much wrong with Harry, and if he did not read patent medicine advertisements he would be a happier man. Just now he's trying something for his nerves, and if there's anything left in the bottle at the end of the week I shall take it myself."

"Poor Harry!" she said softly.

"Yes. I'm a brute to grouse," he said, almost gruffly, and seemed to imply in some subtle fashion that she was a provocative party to his brutality.

It occurred to her as strange that he never spoke about the time when she would be mistress of Fossaway manor. It would have been natural in him to say "when you're married I hope you'll cure Harry of that nonsense," but he made no such reference. That was the strange thing about Dick, that he never even suggested or hinted of a coming time when she would be Countess of Chelford. In one way she was glad he did not—especially now.

They wound slowly through the leafy lanes, passed a little wood, all olive, russet and purple with the decay of autumn, and came to the station ten minutes ahead of time.

"You have had no further visit from your Black Abbot?" she asked, as they strolled on to the station platform.

He shook his head.

"No; the police came last night to make inquiries. I don't suppose it will go much farther. You read about it in the newspaper, of course?"

She shook her head.

"Servants' talk," she said.

"It is queer that Harry is scared of this spook. He never goes outside the house when the old Abbot is reported in the neighborhood."

"You don't believe either?"

He pursed his lips.

"When I see a ghost I shall believe it. Until then I am politely skeptical."

As the train drew out of the station she put her head out of the window and looked back. He was standing stock still upon the platform where she had left him; and although she could not see his face, she felt that he was gazing after her, and thought she detected a certain tenseness in his very attitude—all of which was very pleasing to Miss Leslie Gwyn.

Strange as it may seem, she had never visited her brother's office on High Holborn before she left her taxi at the door and came up in the elevator to his magnificent suite. Her appearance had a prosaic cause. She had left the country without a penny; a fact she did not realize till the ticket collector, working through the train, came into her compartment and aroused her from a day dream to the realization that she had neither ticket nor money to pay for it. She gave the man her card, and a taxi brought her to Holborn.

She was to have another novel experience. A tall, thick set man, with iron-gray hair and a strong, attractive face, had come into the waiting room to meet her. She remembered him as the solitary fisherman who had sat fishing for hours on the bank of Ravensrill, without, apparently, catching anything. So this was the redoubtable Mr. Gilder of whom Arthur had so often spoken. She was not specially curious about him. He was a head clerk, and, by Arthur's account, a clever man at his work; but now that she saw him, she was impressed. He was distinctive—outside of type. The average of humanity you may pass in the street without noticing.

A Grain of Mustard Seed

ly torment her, shame her, this proud woman. Besides, she had prayed for a quick end to her endurance of her son—and the belief in his dishonor ought to furnish it. He handed her the bag of jewels silently.

He missed Adriance's spurning look. In fact, Adriance, his mother, the whole building, seemed to rock in space. He had to hold tight to the railing of his stairs. His mother's fingers, closing over the doeskin bag, were very cold; that much his senses noted.

"Give him some money, Adriance. I can't bear this. Let's go."

Lorrison took the money. It would pay the doctor, other expenses. There would be difficulties, perhaps, about the burial of this incognito; money might help him through some of them. He even murmured an instinctive "Thank you, sir."

And Adriance laughed.

It was more startling to the young man's nerves than a blow would have been. It gathered him together from head to foot, tore a sort of cry from him, and then left him huddled on the lowest step of the ascent to purgatory, while he gave way to hysterical weeping. He had named himself a thief; he had taken alms his father, so long ago a dead man, lay up there, so soon again to be a dead man. And Adriance laughed!

Just before morning Godfrey Mason Gill died, in a sudden delirium. It was extraordinary thereafter to see his beauty return to him as he lay there at last so still.

Fanny Brett waited below that portrait, but restrained herself from trying to meet its eyes. She understood better since she had seen the original, that curious expression. Her own eyes were no longer worshipful, but they held this afternoon a steady, cold light of purposefulness. When Mrs. Adriance came slowly down the room, her gracefulness not able to disguise her reluctance to see this visitor at all, Fanny stood up and turned her back upon the portrait.

"I hoped you would decide to see me, Mrs. Adriance. And I hope you will come with me now, at once, to your son's room. It's terribly important. If you refuse you will be sorry afterwards."

"Come with you to Lorrison's room? What an amazing request! I went there yesterday."

"I know you did. It was—yesterday — what happened yesterday — what you did—that brought me here today with my 'amazing request.' It's really more than a request, Mrs. Adriance. I think that you must come. Lorrison won't be in his room."

"Then what possible reason—?"

"I can't tell you my reason here. But you must believe me. It's too important." Her blue eyes, with their mysterious dignity of judgment, mastered Mary's weaker will, held it and drew it.

"And you insist upon making a mystery?"

"I must insist."

"Just a moment, please. I would like to consult my husband."

"Your husband? Yes, Mr. Adriance had better come with you."

Adriance, consulted in the upstairs sitting room, was scornful, angry, but would not let her go alone, since she was now determined to go.

"I have to, Mathew. It's a melodrama of some sort, I quite understood, to win over my sympathy, I suppose. Don't be afraid that I shall weaken. But if I didn't go—you know what my imagination would do to me. I'd acquire a sense of guilt. And, then, that poor girl has—a look!"

They got into Fanny's waiting cab and drew their spiritual and social garments well aside from her. The ride was taken in silence to that shabby street. Adriance twirled his folded pince-nez and wore a small, sneering look, which tried to smile down Fanny's intrepidity.

She went before them up the stairs. Mary's heart, beating suddenly in intuitive suspense, took all her breath.

"Mathew, I feel—O, how I hate this!"

"Shall we go back? I told you—"

"O, no, no—I must see it through."

The attic floor was very still. Fanny, standing in front of Lorrison's door where he had stood yesterday to guard his secret, faced them and held up her hand. She spoke in a low voice as though some one slept behind the door.

"I only found out the truth this morning," she said, "by chance. Your son fainted on the stairs as he came down to get some help. I found him—my room is two floors down—a much better one than his. I helped him up here, learned the truth. In fact, I guessed it when I saw——"

Mary made the involuntary movement of a mother. "He's ill—dead?"

"No. Not he. But for three weeks here in this terrible little hot room, sleeping on the floor, he's been nursing some one, a man who was dying of delirium tremens, a man whose name, whose existence, your son felt he must keep secret, at no matter what cost—even the cost of being called a thief by you. He kept the secret from me because this was a man I had been taught to worship, and from you, because his being alive at all would make your lives—impossible. When you came here yesterday and called your son a thief, he stood against the door and wouldn't let you in. That man was dying then. Rather than let you find out the truth, my Godfrey went in and found the jewels that man had taken from the house that was once his own. . . . And my Godfrey gave them to you and let you believe . . . O, why did you always find it easy to think evil—never easy to think good of him? Why didn't you ever give him any—faith? . . . Godfrey is out now. He doesn't know that I've brought you here. But, when I had learned the truth, I knew that you must be told. His—his being dead makes it less terrible. Will you come in now, Mrs. Gill—and see—that man?"

* * * *

Below his father's portrait again, his mother pleaded with him.

"You must let me help you, dear. Don't be unkind——"

Lorrison smiled. "I'm a fool to decline any help I can get. I know that well enough. But all the time I feel that the only help I'll ever need all the rest of my life is the help that Fanny gives me."

"Little Fanny's help? It can't be a very big help, Lorry."

Fanny's young workingman husband looked at his mother with a face that had definitely given up all thought of an escape from reality; that was, in fact, possessed by a beautiful belated thirst for living. "It's not so very big, perhaps, Fanny's help. About the size, mother"—and here, for the first time, his reproach broke through upon her and put itself into a word—"about the size of a grain of mustard seed. But—that's enough to move mountains."

tinguishable. These weapons had been fashioned in odd moments by a convict named Gideon, a mild-mannered murderer, who was the brains of the whole affair. Though the prisoners at that time were forbidden to talk, they managed to communicate their plans and to bring them to a successful conclusion.

Fate played Gideon a queer trick a few days after the escape, for he was captured by a 14-year-old farm boy with an unloaded gun!

Cool and Casual.

Robert Fay, German, convicted during the war of placing bombs on American ships, accomplished the impossible at Atlanta. With another prisoner named Knoblock, he forged a pass in the name of the chief engineer of the prison, which permitted the two to go into the yard of the institution. They obtained a ladder, some rags, and a few coils of wire and went to work.

First Fay presented the pass to the guard at the yard, stating he and his companion were to clean and fix the electric lights in the yard. The two worked busily about the yard for fifteen minutes, then they went to the tower guard and again presented the pass, saying they were to fix the lights on the grounds of the warden's residence farther away.

The tower guard should have telephoned to the office to verify the pass, but he neglected to, so deceived was he by the cool and casual attitude of Fay and Knoblock. He watched the pair working around the warden's house and presently Fay and his companion were miles away.

For a woman to escape from prison is possible, but for her to remain free of capture is something that has almost never been accomplished. In recent years the escape of Clara Phillips, hammer murderess, is about the only exception to the rule. She not only got out but she stayed out for many months.

Free Five Months.

Eight days after Mrs. Phillips was convicted of killing Alberta Meadows, and sentenced to serve ten to twenty years, she disappeared from her cell in the heart of Los Angeles. Three iron bars and a square sash netting in the window had been sawed through, leaving a hole barely large enough for a slender woman to squeeze through.

Mrs. Phillips had kept the sawed bars in place with chewing gum. She had been allowed to have a pretty curtain at her window. This concealed the rent after she had gone.

Barefooted, the prisoner had climbed through the window and, once out on the ledge, she had attached a rope around her armpits. At the other end of the rope was Jesse Carson, adventurer. He dragged the woman to the roof and from there they slid down a drain pipe to a building next door, and thence to a waiting automobile.

For five months Mrs. Phillips was hunted all over the country, by every means at the command of the police, and was finally captured in Honduras. It was learned then that she had lived in Los Angeles for several weeks after her escape. Now she is in San Quentin, where the bars are heavier.

Winona Green, another convicted murderess, also escaped from prison, but she was soon taken into custody. Had she been a man she might have gotten away for longer, but her sex betrayed her. Seen walking down a railroad track alone, she at once aroused suspicion, and she was arrested within a few days after her escape.

Dummy Trick.

Another ingenious escape by way of the roof was that of Joseph Sorace. He collected bits of paper and rags (this probably took him many weeks) and stuffed them inside the blankets on his cot. At the same time he sawed away at the bars of his cell. When he decided to go he left the stuffed blankets as a dummy and was able to deceive the guard in his section just long enough.

From his cell, Sorace climbed to the roof, hid until the way was clear, and slid down a telephone wire. He dashed across forty-five feet of open space, climbed the wall, dropped into the Hudson, and swam away.

Had Sorace been detected in the act of climbing the wall he would not have stood a chance. Sing Sing has powerful searchlights which can sweep the river for miles, and it has fast boats to pursue a swimming fugitive. Few have ever escaped by way of the river.

Flees as Woman.

Two years ago a convict named Malloy staged quite an escape. It was during, or after, the presentation of the Sing Sing prison play, performed by inmates, for outsiders. Malloy obtained some female clothes which had been worn by one of the characters in the play, and when the audience walked out he walked out with them.

Jack Ryan, alias McCormick, a convict with one escape already on his record, broke out of Sing Sing last year by way of the prison chapel. Assigned to sweep the chapel floor, he spread the bars of the window, slid down two stories to an inclosure and then he either scaled the twenty-two-foot wall on the northern land side or else climbed the ten-foot wall on the river side.

MR. NICKELDICK'S COLORED CAT'S TAIL.

BY WM DONAHEY.

Something was wrong with the colored cat. She twitched her tail nervously, her ears sagged, and her whiskers dropped. She stopped purring and she hadn't sung for a week.

It worried Mr. Nickeldick. He was mighty fond of Tilly and he made up his rabbit mind to keep an eye on her. He noticed that she seldom drank her milk and that she stared at things for minutes at a time.

Once she scorched one of Mr. Nickeldick's best striped shirts, right while she was staring at the iron.

"She's sick with something," thought the rabbit. "I'll speak to her."

He waited until she had washed the dinner dishes and hung up the dish towels to dry.

"Tilly," he said, stepping into the kitchen, "are you sick?"

"Mistah Nickeldick, suh, no, suh; Ah's indisposed, suh," she answered.

"What seems to be the trouble?" asked the rabbit.

"Ah is indisposed in de tail, suh."

"Aches and pains?" inquired Mr. Nickeldick.

"Both," answered the colored cat. "Sometimes de pain aches and sometimes de aches pain, and sometimes they is doin' all their stuff together."

"Tilly," said Mr. Nickeldick, "I think it would be wise to call in the doctor."

"Mistah Nickeldick, suh, no, suh," answered the colored cat. "Ah ain't got no use fo' them doctahs. What they do? They jus' come in and say, 'Stick out yo' tongue,' then they nod their head and look like a owl and say yo' got somethin' sick about yo' what has a name a mile long and then they write out a conscription fo' three dollars. No, suh, Ah got to be sick three dollahs' worth befo' Ah want a doctah 'round heah.

"No, suh; these doctahs don't charge right fo' their work. They ought to charge yo' accordin' to de amount of sickness yo' all has. If yo' all feels like thirty cents they ought to charge yo' only thirty cents; but no, they all charge yo' three dollahs."

"But you must remember, Tilly," said Mr. Nickeldick, "if you are sick ten dollars' worth they never charge you more than three dollars."

"Mistah Nickeldick, suh," answered the colored cat stiffly, "when yo' all is sick more than three dollahs' worth yo is out of de doctah's care—yo' is then in de undahtakah's class."

In spite of all Mr. Nickeldick could say, Tilly would not have a doctor, so the matter was dropped for the time being, but next morning the cat was much worse and Mr. Nickeldick made her go to bed.

He made a cup of catnip tea and carried it up to her, but it didn't seem to do much good, so he called in a doctor.

The doctor was a polecat in a frock coat. He carried a dachshund satchel, and a clean handkerchief in his breast pocket gave him a respectable appearance.

"You'll have to be very gentle with the patient," Mr. Nickeldick told the doctor.

"Is she sick?" asked the polecat.

"Why, of course," answered Mr. Nickeldick. "She has a very strong dislike for doctors."

"Don't blame her," said the polecat. "I'd dislike 'em, too, if I were sick."

When the doctor appeared the colored cat threw one of her shoes at him and Mr. Nickeldick had to argue with her for half an hour before she would let the polecat examine her.

The doctor looked at the colored cat's tongue. He grunted a few times and took the temperature of her tail.

"You have got wagonitus of the tail," grunted the polecat.

"LAWSY!" gasped the colored cat. "Ah didn't know Ah was as sick as that."

The doctor put Tilly on a diet of catfish and fox grass. He told her to stay in bed and promised to come to see her the next day.

Mr. Nickeldick hired Mrs. Liberty Raccoon as a nurse, and the colored cat was given the best attention for several days.

After the doctor had made several visits the colored cat decided to question him.

"Mistah Doctah, suh," she said. "Jus' what am dis wagonitus?"

"It's rheumatism of the wagging nerve of the tail," answered the polecat.

"If all Ah has got is jus' plain rheumatism of de tail they ain't no use fo' to have a doctah pesterin' 'round heah. Yo' all jus' take yo' satchel and make yo'self scarce fo' Ah's gwine fo' to quit bein' sick," said the colored cat as she reached for her shoe. The polecat left in a huff and Tilly called for Mr. Nickeldick.

"Mistah Nickeldick, suh," she said, when the rabbit stood beside her bed, "Ah have done dismissed the doctah. Ah don't need no doctah fo' de rheumatism. They is nothin' as good fo' de rheumatism as a iron ring."

"Iron ring!" exclaimed Mr. Nickeldick.

"Yes, suh," said the colored cat. "Iron draws de rheumatism. Yo' jus get me a iron ring fo' to put on my tail and it will done draw de rheumatism out quicker than a ice cream cone will melt in a bake oven."

Carried a dachshund satchel.

Mr. Nickeldick measured Tilly's tail and hurried to the blacksmith. In a short time he returned and Mrs. Raccoon placed the ring on the cat's tail.

"LAWSY!" exclaimed the colored cat when the ring had been fitted snugly on her tail. "Ah can feel it a drawin' the rheumatism right out already."

The next day Tilly felt so much better she got out of bed and dressed herself, but the ring was so heavy she had to drag her tail, so Mr. Nickeldick made a sling for it, and she was able to go about her work.

In a few days the colored cat was quite herself. The rheumatism had left her and she was singing her old songs again.

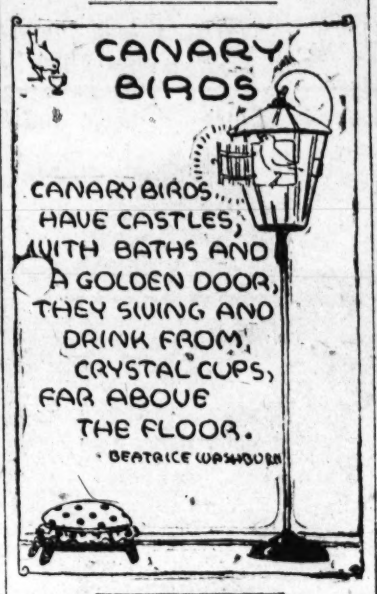

"No, suh," she told Mr. Nickeldick, "doctahs is all right fo' some things, but fo' rheumatism Ah chooses de blacksmith."

Eads Bridge Was Big Building Feat

The great Eads bridge which spans the Mississippi at St. Louis, is so-named after its chief engineer, Captain James B. Eads. It is built in three spans, the largest being 520 feet long. Each span carries two railways and a highway for teams, street cars and pedestrians.

The four great piers supporting the bridge stand on bed-rock, far below the ordinary bed of the river. To erect these piers it was necessary to sink great steel cassions in sections. Workers found great difficulty in remaining on the job in these cassions because of the changes in air pressure at different depths.

Work on the bridge was begun in 1867 and finished in 1874, at a cost of approximately $6,500,000. It stands as a monument to the work of the designers and builders—carrying to us the lesson that no matter what the obstacles may be, intelligence and determination always complete the work in hand.

RIDDLES MAKE MAILS HEAVY, BUT ARE FUN

Riddles from every corner of the country make our postman ask himself a riddle every morning, and that is "How do the riddle fans ever expect me to carry all their letters?" But that's one that you don't have to solve, and there are ten others that will give you plenty of others without it.

301. What benefit can be derived from a paper of pins?—Russel Eash, Elkhart, Indiana.

302. What's the latest dance hit?—Viola Wood, Osborn, Ohio.

303. What has four fingers and a thumb and neither flesh or bone?—Willie Reavis, Yadkinville, N. C.

304. Why do you make a mistake when you put on your shoe?—Minnie Henley, St. Louis, Missouri.

SUMMER READING.

During the summer months, while schools are not in session, there is time to devote to the things you like best to do. Reading should be included—and a carefully selected reading list will make it possible to cover much more ground and derive more profit than if no plan is followed.

Your libraries have such lists already prepared. They are compiled by folks who know the value of good books, and know how you enjoy reading the right kind of stories. Select from these lists the titles and authors you like best. Then spend enough time on each book to be able to tell the story after it is finished.

Follow this program through to the beginning of your school work next fall—and you will surprise both yourself and your teachers with the progress you have made. —R. O. B.

My Pet

Summer means play time for boys and girls, and also for their pets. All the dogs and cats and squirrels and other animals must be having all the fun in the world, now that they can be out of doors all the time with their owners. Vacation offers you lots of time to teach your pets new tricks, and we are expecting to hear of many new stunts that they can do before very long.

Coyote Makes A Real Pet.

Would you like a coyote for a pet? Jack Miner, of Detroit, Michigan, has written us about "Mary," a young coyote which he owns. Jack says that when on a touring trip through the west last summer, he caught this coyote, with his uncle's help, in Colorado. He tells us that all his friends are very envious of his strange pet. Mary will eat out of his hand and jump up into his lap, lie down and go to sleep there, exactly as though she were an ordinary little gray dog. Coyotes, as you know, are wild animals. Jack says he hopes that Mary does not grow up too quickly, as she may not remain tame, and he will have to give up his pet.

A Trusting Toad.

Frank Smith, of Tacoma, Washington, has a different kind of pet. It is a toad. Frank says that he often saw the toad in the front yard and by giving it water and treating it kindly, he made friends with it. Toads are rather unfriendly creatures, as they are afraid of people. Naturally, Frank is proud of having the little fellow trust him to the extent of making friends. He writes that he is going to move from the street on which he is living now, and is very sorry that he cannot take his newly acquired pet with him.

A Friendly 'Coon

Earl Tubbs, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, writes that he has a raccoon as a pet. Raccoons as a rule are not very friendly, and Earl keeps "Jack" in a cage in the cellar of his home. He can let him out on a chain to run around for exercise. Jack will eat out of his hand, but he knows immediately when a stranger offers him food out of his hand. Jack is very wise and will keep quiet and be friendly when his master is near the cage. When he comes home from school, Jack will be walking up and down the length of his cage, impatient to have his dinner given to him.

Jelly For Jerry Jud.

Homer Kibby, of Garden City, Kansas, has written us that he has a fox terrier puppy named Jerry Jud. He is especially fond of jelly. Homer says that he will stand a few feet away from Jerry Jud with a spoonful of jelly in his hand and the dog will walk on his hind legs to him and get the jelly. He can do all sorts of other little tricks beside this "special one," as Homer says.

"Young Marooner" Still Hale and Hearty

—By—
NELLIE KENYON

"Frank" the Merry Member of the Mystic Circle, is Now a Prominent Citizen of Chattanooga, Hale and Hearty at 83 Years of Age

ALL Georgians know and love the story about "The Young Marooners," a book written in pre-Civil War days by the Rev. F. R. Goulding.

"Frank," the merry member of the mystic circle, and the only living young marooner around which Dr. Goulding wove the story of his masterpiece, lives in Chattanooga, and although he has long since passed the three score and ten alloted time, Captain Benjamin Lloyd Goulding still has that cheerful and active disposition of which his father so often wrote in "The Young Marooners."

Although he is almost eighty-three years of age, having been born on February 19, 1844, Captain Goulding has a splendid physique, and has never been seriously ill in his life. He is now making plans to attend the next Confederate reunion in the spring of 1927 at Tampa, at which time he has been invited to take a trip down the bay to Marooners Island, named after the book of which his father was the author.

The life of Captain Goulding is of interest in more ways than one to the citizenry of Georgia. He is the only surviving member of Company A, First Volunteer Georgia Infantry, of the Confederate army. He enlisted in this organization in January, 1861, and was paroled from prison in February, 1865.

Captain Goulding lives at the Confederate Memorial Hall in Chattanooga, and here has stored away among his valuable collections many different copies of "The Young Marooners" from the time it was first published in 1852, seventy-four years ago, up to the present edition. He quite frequently re-reads the story to refresh his memory about some particular incident that happened in his boyhood days, and gets a good laugh out of it.

Million Copies Sold.

It is estimated that around a million copies of "The Young Marooners" have been sold in this country, and abroad. Captain Goulding says that five different sets of plates have been worn out in this country; that it has been printed by seven different foreign houses, five in England, and two in Scotland. At this point in the story he took from a shelf in his office a neatly bound book in morocco which he exhibited as a copy of the Edinburgh edition printed in 1853. "The Young Marooners" has been translated into several different languages in the course of its history.

As Frank, Captain Goulding vouches for incidents referred to in the book as having been real occurrences with but few exceptions. However, he says that most of these actually happened on the coast of Georgia. To illustrate this he turned to a particularly familiar chapter in the book that had something to say about Frank, and after reading a paragraph through, he stopped and explained where the incident took place—in Georgia—adding "That was me, but I tried to get my father to leave it out of the book."

Captain Goulding's father, the Rev. F. R. Goulding, lived at Darien, Ga., where the old Goulding home was located before the Civil War. After the war Dr. Goulding moved to Roswell, Ga., twenty-two miles northwest of Atlanta, where he died. "The Young Marooner," however, was written at Richmond Bath, a famous resort near Augusta, Ga.

Dr. Goulding was one of the well-known Georgians who was forced to refugee to Macon in 1863 when the Goulding home at Darien was burned along with the town by negro troops, headed by General Jim McGomery, the famous "Jay Hawker."

The Young Marooners' misfortunes were many, as related by Dr. Goulding, but the youngest marooner has lived to tell the story of how in later years he was called on to battle with a greater misfortune in protecting and reclaiming the copyright privileges of the book.

Captain B. F. Goulding, who was "Frank," the merry member of the mystic circle, in "The Young Marooners."

Story of the Book.

The story, published for the first time, goes about like this:

In the latter part of 1865 Captain Goulding carried a revised copy of "The Young Marooners" to the Philadelphia publishers to discuss with them what had been done to keep it alive during the war. This copy, he explained, contained several changes in the text.

Upon arriving in Philadelphia Captain Goulding found that the original publisher had died, and his business had been taken over by his chief clerk, James B. Claxton. Mr. Claxton persuaded Captain Goulding to leave with him a copy of the edition showing all the changes. Within a very short time a revised edition of "The Young Marooners" was published under the name of the new publisher, and Dr. Goulding was notified that he had forfeited all publication rights in the United States, as under the federal government's new copyright laws no one was allowed to publish a book without the consent of his publisher. The publication rights had heretofore been secured through the Confederate government. Captain Goulding points out that this is the only case in which this law was taken advantage of, following the Civil War.

This condition ran on for several years, when finally Mr. Claxton suddenly gave up his business, went to Canada, and died there. The plates were eevntually recovered, and the publication transferred to Dodd Mead and company, of New York, the present publishers.

Charles Goulding, a brother of Captain Goulding, known as "Robert," in "The Young Marooners," who was also in the Civil War and had lost a leg in 1863 at the second battle of Bull Run, died later in Richmond as a result of a shell exploding over his head. This Marooner is buried in Hollywood cemetery.

Jett Howard, who was the character "Harold" in "The Young Marooners," and a cousin of the two other members of the circle, died in the early 90s at Savannah, Ga. He also joined the southern army during the Civil War.

Captain Goulding's sister, Mary, who was in later years Mrs. R. G. Helmer, of Atlanta, and who will be remembered as a member of the marooning expedition, died in Macon in 1908.

Goulding Prominent Citizen.

Captain Goulding is at present adjutant of the N. B. Forrest camp of Confederate veterans, and is said to have taken a leading part in the organizing of more associations and firms during his forty-eight years of residence in Chattanooga than any other citizen, and is one of the best-known and most beloved veterans in the city.

He was born on February 19, 1844, near Augusta, Ga., being one of nine children. He sprang from pure English ancestry who came to America as pioneers, aided in naming Dorchester, Mass., for Dorchester, England, then in creating a third Dorchester in South Carolina, in 1696, and the fourth Dorchester in Georgia, in 1752. The Rev. Dr. Goulding, his grandfather, was the first Presbyterian minister born in Georgia.

Captain Goulding was planning to enter Princeton when the Civil War broke out, but volunteered his service in Company A, of the First Georgia regiment, which was the first command in the state to engage in active service by capturing Fort Pulaski at the mouth of the Savannah river. He served with distinction, and was captured and held as a prisoner.

Because of the small amount of food that he received while in prison, when released Captain Goulding weighed only eighty-one pounds, although he was five feet ten inches in height.

Captain Goulding came to Chattanooga in 1878, establishing the local offices of the United States weather bureau. It was while connected with the bureau in 1880 that he worked out the first flood warning service in America.

Perhaps the accomplishment of which he was prouder of than anything else, was the leading part he played in the organization of a Georgia society in Chattanooga in 1896. He served as its president for several years.

Interesting Curios.

Captain Goulding has many interesting curios in his possession, some of these he has carried with him longer than the life of the average man. One of these is a copy of the original edition of the song "From Greenland's Icy Mountains," published in 1824 and autographed by the composer, Dr. Lowell Mason, on October 8, 1869. Captain Goulding keeps it in a Russian leather case and the music is backed with vellum.

He uses a Barlow knife given him in 1852. He also carried with him in his vest pocket a genuine ivory and silver plated memorandum book that he purchased in London in 1867, and a watch that he has carried for fifty-five years. Captain Goulding states that he has kept a diary since 1859.

Included in his father's papers Captain Goulding has a diary kept in Arabic by a negro slave who was known as Ben Allah.

Though he is past eighty-two years of age, Captain Goulding rises each morning at 5 o'clock and retires in the evening at ten. He takes a long walk for several miles every day and a nap each day at noon, and attributes his excellent health to this program.

Captain Goulding has no immediate relatives and never married. He is the oldest man bearing the family name since 1696. He retired from active business in 1903, but spends much of his time at the public library reading and is always anxious to participate in any public movement.

The latest edition of "The Young Marooners" has a most interesting introduction by Joel Chandler Harris.

Radio Music and Big, Smiling Moon Make Frogland Dance Gala Affair

Every one must have a bit of social life, and the frogs are no exception. Therefore we see them tripping the light fantastic at the annual Frogtown ball.

According to Miss Teresa Toad, poet laureate of Swampland, 'the dance was held beneath a smiling moon to wonderful music supplied by the new Tree-o-dyne radio, built and operated by Old Man Turtle."

Old Man Turtle, on the other hand, reported that, because of static interference from the moon, the radio reception was not all that it should have been.

"Of course," he said, "the moon is a very useful and ornamental thing, but how anybody can call that vacant grin a smile is beyond me."

Old Man Turtle showed real originality in making his radio. An aerial made from a snake and a cobweb and a lily for a loudspeaker—that shows brain work, doesn't it?

THE BARRICADED GATE

The Story of a Bombing Plot Which a Boy Overheard and Averted.

By W. BOYCE MORGAN

SYNOPSIS.

George Wallace, working as office boy at the Judson Tube company during summer vacation, is taking dinner with Mr. Judson, owner of the plant, on the evening when the men at the mill go on strike. Bob Judson takes George home in the Judson car, and when they stop to fix a puncture on the way, George overhears some of the mill laborers plotting to blow up the Judson home and raid the mill, which is guarded by Paul Lane, a friend of George, and a few other men. The two boys race home with two policemen, and George heroically pulls the fuse of the bomb that was about to blow up the house. The policemen capture the bombers, and the boys and Mr. Judson start on a mad ride to the plant, which the strikers are attacking. When they arrive at the top of the little hill above the main gate of the plant, they see an angry crowd of men about to rush it.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

INSTALLMENT IV.

Gazing down the hill, they saw the crowd of men surge forward. The leaders reached the wire fence that guarded the entrance to the company's property. A huge log was brought up, and, using it for a battering ram, the strikers were attacking the lock of the gate.

"They are going to get in," said Mr. Judson hopelessly. "I hope that Paul and the men have enough sense to get away. They can't ever hold that mob out, and once they are in, they are liable to do anything."

"Do you suppose any of them are trying to get in down by the river or at the truck gate?" asked George, his eyes glued on the spectacle be

"They may," said Mr. Judso Then he suddenly uttered a cry. "Look! they are climbing over the fence." He sank back into his seat. "Well, that ends it."

But George and Bob, still watching, saw a strange thing happen. They gave a start of alarm as several shots in quick succession broke in upon the hoarse cries of the men. There was a pause in the movement below. Then came more shots, again in rapid succession.

"The men in the mill are shooting at them!" gasped George.

Mr. Judson was now fully alarmed. "This is awful!" he breathed.

"Look! Look!" cried Bob. "They have turned! The strikers are running away! And they are coming up here."

"Yes, they're coming up the hill!" shouted Mr. Judson. "Turn the car, Bob, turn it! Down the other street. Go into the plant through the truck gate."

The car was already partly turned. Throwing the wheel over with all his might, racing the motor, Bob had backed to the curb. With a roar the car swung around, back a few yards, down a side street for a block, and then down the hill toward the plant.

"What do you suppose happened," marveled George. "What made them run?"

"The shots, I suppose," answered Mr. Judson. "The men must have taken the revolvers out of the cashier's cage and fired them."

Bob sniffed. "I wouldn't think a crowd of strikers could be driven off by a couple of revolvers," he said. Then he started. "Maybe they are going to try to get in somewhere else."

The possibility of that alarmed them again, and they drove cautiously to the truck gate of the mill. There, at the sound of their horn, the head of them again, and they drove cautiously from the door of his shed.

"Open the gate, Watkins," called Mr. Judson. "This is Judson."

The old man made haste to comply. "What was all the shooting?" he called, as he swung the gate open.

"The strikers rushed the main gate, but they were driven off," replied the owner of the mill. "If anything happens down her, phone the office in a hurry. We'll have the police here in a few minutes now."

They drove on toward the main office. All was silent in the yard of the plant, and as they approached the office building they saw a strange sight.

Just inside the gate was a barricade made of steel trucks. Behind the barricade were the men who were guarding the plant. They could be seen but dimly, but the sight made George call out in surprise.

"Look, Mr. Judson—they've got a machine gun!"

"That's what it looks like," said Mr. Judson wonderingly. "No wonder the strikers ran."

The car came to a stop in front of the main office and Paul Lane ran up to it. His face was flushed and his eyes were sparkling. He jumped upon the running board.

"Mr. Judson!" he greeted. "Just in time. I beg to report, sir, that the enemy attacked and were repulsed." Then he laughed gaily.

"We saw it from the top of the hill," answered Mr. Judson, "and Lane, you and the men with you have done me a great service tonight."

George broke into the conversation then, jumping from the car and recounting the details of the plot and the attempt to blow up the Judson home. The other three men who had "held the fort" with Paul Lane, came up, and Mr. Judson praised them warmly.

"Lane," he said finally, "that was a wonderful piece of work. If they had got in there they might have killed you all and they surely would have wrecked the plant. But tell me, how did you do it? I suppose you frightened them off with the machine gun, but where did you get the machine gun?"

Lane and the other men laughed. "So it fooled you too, did it? That's not a machine gun, Mr. Judson, it's only my surveying transit. But with the tripod shortened, and with it set up behind the barricade in the dim light, it certainly looked enough like one to fool those fellows, and the shots from my revolver, fired in quick succession, sounded like the first bullets of a regular bombardment. So they ran."

Mr. Judson, after a moment of silence, chuckled admiringly. His renewed words of praise were broken by the arrival of a car bearing a squad of police.

"Well," said Mr. Judson a few minutes later, as they prepared to leave the mill, which the police were now guarding, "that's what I call the lucky ending of a bad night. With Egbert in jail this strike will collapse tomorrow. No one was hurt, the mill will be down only a day at most, and I've discovered that Paul Lane is worth anything I can do for him."

Then he was silent for a moment. George, feeling very sleepy now that the excitement was over, drowsed in the front seat. Mr. Judson tapped him on the shoulder.

"George," he said soberly, "my whole family had a mighty close call tonight, and I'm not forgetting that it was your bravery and quick wit that saved all our lives. You may need some help in later years, my boy, and you know where you can always get it."

With a happy grin and a word of thanks, George settled down into the seat. Then Bob nudged him.

"Say, George," he said, "maybe Betty isn't going to think you're the whole show after this!"

The End.

Dear Boys and Girls: I have written to the letter writers' club once. I received 13 letters and I certainly did appreciate them. I am 14 years old, have black hair, blue eyes and fair complexion. I am going to write you boys and girls a short poem to remind you of school when we studied Columbus.

COLUMBUS SAILED THE GREAT SEAS.

I.
Columbus sailed the great seas
As often as he did please.
His ships were so very small
They could hardly stand a squall.

II.
Columbus was very brave and bold.
He sailed for precious silver and gold.
When he did reach the faraway land
He danced for joy on the golden sand.

III.
Columbus got to be quite an old man
To keep on sailing for discovery of land.
But soon the angels closed his eyes forever;
We should forget him never.
For he was the very man
That discovered the America land:
I am always your friend.

THE TRAVELER'S GARDEN.

I.
I am not hard to entertain
When by the window of a train
I'm left alone to scan the sky
And all God's earth-things passing by.

II.
I make believe the train stands still,
While town and city, vale and hill
Go romping down my vision's way
Like children on a holiday.

III.
Scenes glad and sad, sights rare and old
My panoramic reels unfold;
One station greets a bridal pair;
The nex t sees sorrow leaving there.

IV.
Milk men—men leaving burdens pass;
Old shanties, cars and broken glass;
Then suddenly from out the grime
We rush upon a scene sublime.

V.
A backyard fence is brought to view
Aglow with buds of rarest hue.
The speeding train you might well say
Has found a floral right-of-way.

VI.
Tall hollyhokes lift stately heads
To hide unsightly backyard sheds;
Bright roses too, to hint that they
Are all there is to see today.

VII.
A cry of gladness fills the car;
The train speeds on and soon is far
From where the track side garden cast
Its radiance on all who passed.

VIII.
Then comes the wonder: Who indeed
Had felt the weary traveler's need
For such a garden? Heaven bless
And tell that heart our happiness.
